"Never Again!"
You've heard this expression lots of times. Possibly you've used it when learning by costly experience that attire is proved better by service than by the price ticket; especially when the attire was identified as being "cheap at the price." It was indeed—cheap, too, for you. "Cheap" attire is never good enough for you.
"Not for the lowest prices, but made in the finest way."
This expresses our idea of merchandising since 1859.

The Dog
And this is the way that the Dog, With his moist and tender nose, Becomes Man's friend and shadow And the foeman of his foe.
When Adam quitted the Garden, Along with his bosom wife, For to drive and swink and swither And earn his way in life, The Animals stilled about him To grunt and whine goodby— But little enough their grief was, However they piped the eye.
A tear from the rhino trickled, But he did not really care. The hippo mumbled politely, Grumbled the hypocrite bear. One hump of the camel quivered, As a chin that shakes with grief, But his other hump was perky Like it really felt relief. The walrus sniveled dankly In a quite perfunctory way, And the bull was patently anxious To get back to his hay.
And the porcupine and narwhal, The walley and giraffe, Parodied sorrow so broadly They made the penguin laugh.
An Angel stood by the gateway, Twirling a sword of flame, All ready to pink intruders, Whencever they came— (And many's the brave Fancy, Swash-buckling out of hell, He has tickled through the baldric And made the braggart yell; From many a ruffling Vision That swaggered up in mirth He has clipped the ruddy cockcomb And swung him back to Earth.) "Which of you brutes so mournful," The watching Angel said, "Will follow the Man from Eden To toil for daily bread? And which of you brutes so tearful Will give him more than tears, Faithful to his footsteps? Through all his outcast years? Come forward," said the Angel, "Before the barriers close, You friend of all his friendships And foeman of his foes!"
The sly little seal, he sniggered, Chuckled the kangaroo, The chimpanzee pulled a razzerberrie And winked at the cockatoo, His thumb on his proboscis The mangy ape did place, And flickered his ribald digits Right in Adam's face. And they shuffled and lurchered and ambled, Each to his separate den— And that was the honest measure Of what they felt for men.
The Angel smiled in knowledge, He permitted himself a tear, And if he weren't an Angel 'Td say that he sneered a sneer— (They see so much, these Angels, As they ramble here and there, That we must try and forgive them If now and again they wear That manner of sad amusement, That faintly cynical air.)
But a pup there was that lingered In most abject meagre; He lay too broken-hearted Even to bite his flea.
His tail swished desolately, And its swish was his only sound; A playful-foot pup with a belly That griev'd along the ground; His ears were the dragging cypress And his eyes were love profound.
He looked not at the Angel, But of a sudden he rose And he ran and nuzzled Adam, And his soul was in his nose—

He scampered out of the Garden Before the gates could close, The friend of all our friendships And the foeman of our foes.
A large audience was present at the Natural History Society rooms last evening to hear the address by Mrs. W. Edmond Raymond. The address, which was entitled "Why?" was an appreciation of the work of the Natural History Society and was repeated from last year. This was the first of the fall course of lectures. At the close of the lecture, Mrs. Harold Lawrence, the president, thanked Mrs. Raymond on behalf of the society members. It was announced at the meeting that Mrs. George W. Parker would speak next week on the subject, "A spring-time holiday."
