Within the Church a fountain springs, It started from the Saviour's side; Peace, pardon, joy, to all it brings— The life-blood of the crucified.

Its living streams for ever flow, For ever pure, for ever free; The spirit's solace here below, Its succour for eternity.

BOOTS AND SHOES

THE undersigned begs leave to invite attention to his large and well assorted Gent's, Youths', Boys' and Childben's I Subes, of Foreign and Domestic manufi low rates. Having been constantly em at low rates. Having been constantly employed to the manufacture of Boots and Shoes for the last thirty-five years, such a long and practical knowledge qualifies him to judge in these matters; he asserts that the Genis Boots manufactured at this establishment, in point of style, materials and work-manship cannot be excelled in any part of the world.

SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING!

The spirit's selace here below, Its succour for eternity.

He, every one that thirsts draw nigh, Beloved, hear the voice divine:

The broken heart, the contrite sigh, Are welcome there, and there are thine. Come, then the Spirit calls—come near, In humble faith, in trembling love; Drink comfort for thy sorrows here, And taste before the bliss above.

Bishop Dougs.

ANECDOTE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

On Tuesday morning, early, as the Dule of Wellington was riding on horseback from Chatsworth to Chesterfield, his grace was accosted by an old Peninsular veteran, of the name of Juckson, who, in a style which no imposter, could counterfeit, spin a somewhat long yara about an action in Spain at which he had been present, and in the near neighbourhood of his illustrious commandied, of and gave Jackson half-a-soverigm. Still the story went on; Jackson fought another battle over again, where the duke also commanded, "Give he back the half-soverigm, my fine old fellow," said the duke, "and there is a whole one for you." Jackson has has hitherto tolp his stories gratuitous ly, but he now intends to set some value on his Recollations of the Chese.
