There is also the story-in fact, the many stories-of the history of the country is connected the names of many a distinguished French explorer, pioneer and trader, among whom may be mentioned Cartier, Champlain and Denys. In fact, the great fish business which is carried on today by the Robin Company had its origin in a grant from the French king in the early days of the French regime in Canada.

Two old French cannon, marked with the fleur de lis, are mounted in front of the Restigouche county Grammar School at Campbellton, and on inquiry one learns that they are the only surviving relics of the battle of the Restigouche, the last great fight between Britain and France in the final struggle for supremacy of United Empire Lovalists and the town of Petit Rochelle. With the burning of his third church, Talmage seemed to become discouraged, and, strange as it may seem, his vast congregation scattered. They appeared to have no cohesive ability and what became of them was one of the marvels of metropolitan life. Talmage himself subsequently went to Washington, where he was elected assistant to a veteran Presbyterian elergyman and in a short time was placed in charge of the church, but he did not obtain the popularity in the capital that he had held in cosmopolitan Gotham, and the old clergyman was afterwards restored to his charge. In his later years Talmage devoted himself more to literary work and to preaching through the press, one of his sermons being a regular weekly feature of The Telegraph. He was for many years editor of the Christian Herald, and was the author of many devotional books.

The Englishman and the Canadian ar unfamiliar with the best qualities of each other. The complaints which come from South Africa over the English officers' treatment of the colonial officers may be explained partially by misunderstanding explained partially by insunderstanding and partially by the narrow intelligence of the worst sort of English officer.

A braggart here and there may give the colonial officers a bad name. A tyrant here and there may delude colonials into the notion that all Englishmen are tyrants.

The cause of the trouble is deeper than the contempt of the Englishmen for the colonials. The real trouble is the arrogant intolerance which marks the attitud of the professional soldier toward the amateur soldier. This arrogance is a folly not peculia to English officers. Hundreds of English officers are free from such a feeling, and Canada's permanent force has bred in many of its officers as fine a line of con-tempt for the volunteer officer as any Aldershot Englishman can display. It is not a question of Old Countryman and Colonial. It is simply a question of brains or no brains. The English noodle who has mastered the routine and pipe clay routine of barrack life looks down clay routine of barrack life looks down on the colonial officer who has developed his powers in solving the problems of civil life. The Canadian imitation of the regulation caricature on the true English officer thinks to prove his own greatness by exhibiting a contempt for the officer who has sprung to arms from the ranks of civil life. The contempt is a mistake. So civil life. The contempt is a mistake. So is the officer who exhibits the contempt. But the cause of the trouble is not in the character of the Englishman, but 11the
