"FROM FACTORY TO HOME"

Every home Should Player Piano

Above all others it is the one instrument that allows you to master musical technique and expression for yourself. This means self-development—it means a home development—it means that you can unlock the treasure house of musical masterpieces, study them, use them and have them for your own. Just a slight degree of perseverance and you may accomplish with the Player-Piano at no distant time what many have spent years of study to accomplish.

In the Mason & Risch Player-Piano perfection has been attained in every part. The mechanism is perfect.
A tone that is clear and tranquil, as deep and wonderful as the music mind can conceive, you find yourself worshipping the splendid tonal effects.

Come and hear it play. It will be sold to you on terms within reach and within reason, and we will take your old piano in exchange, allowing you every dollar it is worth.

JUST ANOTHER LITTLE TURNING

John was as dear to me as only he knows how to be, to my mother, and she took to him immediately.
John has all the masculine virtues which involve a sense of protection to the weak. I am not sure, that had I been one of those women who was always looking for sympathy always asking for help inefficient, one of the clinging vine sort of women, we should not have been much happier than we have been.

Looking back on it now, I sometimes think I did cling a little during that three weeks of courtship. Perhaps if I could look into John's heart I should find that I had been quite as much of a disappointment to him as he has been to me. Certainly I know one thing, and that is that no one could have been sweeter to my dear mother to the day of her death, than was John, when he was with her.

In a recent play one of the characters said: "When I was a youth in college I thought black was black and white was white, and now I know that it is neither black nor white, but just a splashy gray," which is only another way of saying that none of us is wholly good and surely none of us wholly bad.

That is the reason, I think, that I do not care for plays or stories which make the villain so villainous that you cannot see one white spot in his whole character. However, I did believe at the time of my father's death that John was the most unfeeling man in the world.
Yes—although my mother, in her sweet way, tried to excuse him, and I think possibly John thought he was justified in leaving me to face alone the greatest trouble I had ever had up to that time.

John was very efficient. He consulted with the family doctor, and the family lawyer and made arrangements for the funeral that had not been thought of before but which would make things much more consoling and comfortable for us all.
Late in the afternoon he received a telegram from his office. This he read hurriedly, and then said crisply:

"How much time have I to make the next train home?"

For a moment I could not speak, and then I thought that something terrible must have happened to John's mother.

Is your mother ill, John?" I asked.
"No, dear, mother is never ill.
What time did you say the next train leaves?"

"I—I didn't say. I—I don't think I know exactly!"

Still he did not tell me why he wished to know this, and I was so hurt and stunned that I could not possibly ask him why.

He left me standing there, perfectly mute, and walked down the path calling to the messenger, evidently to ask him if he knew what time the train left. I went slowly into the house. In a few moments John came up the stairs two steps at a time and still without a word began to jam collars and shirts into a valise.

I just sat quietly watching him.
Even then it did not seem possible that John, who had been absolutely tearful in his sympathy when he took my little mother in his arms, should desert me in that troubled hour. "Well, goodbye, girl," he said. "I've only a half an hour to catch that train. I expect the taxi any minute."

"I'm going home immediately.
They've called up a big deal at the office, and I've got to straighten it out. Strange a man can't leave his office for five minutes without something going wrong."

"But, John—" I broke in.
"Oh, yes, I know, I know. But can't you think for a moment—can't you get it through your woman's head, that a man might consider it more necessary to make the money that will keep his wife in comfort?"

"Than to help her bury her dead?" I interrupted. "If you are making this money only for my comfort, I don't want it as much as I want the comfort of your companionship in my present need."

"Don't be foolish, girl. I am going to say goodbye to your mother now. Telegraph me after the funeral and I'll call you up on long distance to-morrow afternoon."

"You needn't do that, John. I don't think I'll be equal to talking to you on long distance."

"I shall call you just the same.
What is the use of being so timid?" Do have a little sense, Kate. Goodbye, dear. When you come to yourself you will know that I am doing this for you and you only."

He bent down to kiss me and if I had been sentenced to death for not returning that kiss, I could not have done so. Perhaps I am wrong, but that was another little turning point. Under similar circumstances nothing would have kept me from John's side.

I know mother felt that way too, although she tried to excuse him in her gentle way. But it is one of the many little things that I have never been able to forgive my husband, even though he gave me a wonderful diamond dinner ring as my particular share of the profits of that business deal.
