The Girl with a Calico Dress. A fig for your upper-ten girls,

With their velvets, and satins and laces, Their diamonds and rubies and pearls, Their miliner figures and faces; They may shine at a party or ball, Emblazoned with half they possess, But give me in place of them all,

My girl with the calico dress. She is cheerful, warm-hearted and true, And kind to her father and mother, She studies how much she can do For her sweet little sister and brother. If you want a companion for life,

To comfort, enliven and bless, She is just the right sort for a wife, My girl with the calico dress.

The Story of a Dollar.

The fancy store was some distance down the avenue, and before they reached it, they had to pass a group of tenement houses, where a number of poor families lived. There was always a crowd of children tumbling about the pavement in front of these houses, dirty little ragmuffins that Lucy had pitied many a time, they seemed so neglected and uncared for. To-day there seemed more of a crowd than ever : and as the little girls drew near, they heard a pitiful crying from amidst the group. A forlorn little boy sat flat on the ground, in a puddle of dirty water, and strewn around were the pieces of a broken

Choice of Animals for Fattening. Mr. Hedley contributed the following valuable hints on fattening cattle to the Newcastle Club and we find them published in the London Agricultural Gazette. He says:

"In my close identification with fat cattle for everal years, I have always found that the best nimals have the most massive heads, most capacious chests, and the strongest spines. have, therefore, evolved a few rules to go by in the purchase of lean ones and scarcely with one exception I have found them to be applicable The head of any of our bovine races ought to have the first consideration; this is the true in dex to the vital acumen, and even bodily construction, and will be found to foreshadow all good or bad that may be accomplished. Thus an aminal possessed of a broad, full, spacious skull, with strong evenly-bent, deflective horns, will be found to have a thick neck at the base, wide thorax, and strong, nervous system; while one with long, narrow, contracted skull, and puny, abruptly bent horns, will be characterized by weakness, wildness, and slowness to fatten. small, dull, sunken eye betokens hardness of touch and inaptitude to fatten; and a bright, large, open, eye, vice versa. A staring, dark, fiery eye often accompanies a small forehead and nereditary wildness, and when combined with small, drooping horns, and a chin with no loose skin hanging from it, is a very despicable animal indeed, weak in constitution, predisposed to lung and mu disease, and sterile in fattening propensities.

Animals with weakly formed heads, have always small loins, and the width of these parts will always be found in an exact ratio with the strength small loins, and the width of these parts will always be found in an exact ratio with the strength of the head. The nose, instead of being long and fine, as Virgil, Aristotle, and several other naturalists recommend it, ought, in my opinion, to be thick, strong, and near the ear as possible, if only in proportion to the size of the frame. Thickness of nose and thickness of chest are often twins, and so are thin, meager, irregular noses and consumption. Small snipy noses of the size of the frame of the twins, and so are thin, meager, irregular noses and consumption. Few are aware of the importance of checking a Cough or "SLIGHT COLD" in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected, soon attacks the lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are a most valuable article, especially so at this season of the year, when Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness and Sore Throat are so prevalent, The Troches give sure and almost immediate relief.
