In the Days of the Red River Rebellion. By John McDougall, with illustrations by J. E. Laughlin, and portraits. William Briggs, Toronto. 303 pages; price $1.00, net.

The sub-title is better, "Life and Adventure in the Far West of Canada." "John", as he is known by Indians and Hudson Bay Factors and pioneer settlers in all the great lone land, knows the land as few can. He has been in it and of it since boyhood. He is in it and of it still. His father, Rev. George McDougall, was a notable traveller and missionary. "John" has been no whit behind, and no whit behind in his wonderful influence over the Indian. "McDougall's Indians" on the edge of the Rockies means good Indians. The book is charming to read, and is a vivid picture of the trapping, hunting, romantic life, which is being quickly driven further and further north by the incoming settlers.

The Bible in Brazil. By Hugh C. Tucker. The Fleming H. Revell Company, Toronto. 293 pages; price $1.25, net.

The author of this book was, during fourteen years, the agent of the American Bible Society for Brazil. His extensive travels gave him excellent opportunities of becoming acquainted with the country and its people. He has given us the results of keen and careful observations in a very readable form. To those who are seeking information concerning the condition of the people in "the neglected continent," and the missionary work carried on amongst them, Mr. Tucker's book may be confidently recommended. They will find the instruction they desire, worked into a most interesting and well-told story. This is just the book to help those who are studying the Special Monthly Topic for July in the General Assembly's Plan of Study for young people's societies.

The All Red Line. Edited by George Johnson. James Hope & Son, Ottawa. 486 pages; $1.50, net.

The completion last October of the cable between Canada and Australia was a great event. Six British governments had combined to carry out the project, Canada's share was conspicuous, and especially that of Sir Sandford Fleming, the originator. The story of the work is now told in detail by Mr. Johnson, and able contributors, with a view to educating the public mind for a still larger undertaking, namely, to connect the Empire throughout by an "all red line," of Imperial telegraphic communication.

When Angels Come to Men. By Margaret E. Sangster. The Fleming H. Revell Company, Toronto. 136 pages; price $1.00, net.
