Is the Indian Civil Service attracting men of ability to the same extent as formerly? An analysis of this year's competitive examination gives a discouraging answer to that question. Says a contemporary:—"Of the first 11 successful candidates only two chose the Indian to the Home Civil Service. Still more striking proof of the declining attraction India offers to young men of ability is found in the fact that only a little lower down the list two successful candidates preferred no appointment to an appointment in India. So much for those who do not chose to come to India. Turning to those who do, we find that out of the 51 recruits the Indian Civil Service has received nearly half are men who failed to take a first class in their degree examination."—Rangoon Times.
