LESSONS AND EXAMPLES OF CONVERSION

Henry L. Richards, writing to one of our exchanges, under the caption "Fifty Years in the Church," dur-"Fifty Years in the Church," writes: When my mind was first directed to the claims of the Catholic Church I had occasion to visit New Orleans, and I naturally availed myself of every favorable opportunity to find out all I could about the Church. Among other places, I visted the Cathedral on a Sunday, and there I was sur-prised to see an immense crowd of a miscellanceus character of which a considerable portion was made up of creoles, colored people and various nationalities. The aisles were crowfied, all were on their inces, venerable old negroes with white heads devotly joining in the worship, and I noticed that the color d slaves sat in the same seats with their masters and even went to Holy Communion at the same sanctuary rail. The scene made a deep impression upon my mind. "This." I said, "is true Christian-ity. Here is a practical illustration of Catholic unity and the spirit of humility and divine charity incul-cated by our Lord. Here rich and poor do really meet together for the Lord is maker of them all. Let my portion be with the true people on a Sunday, and there I was surmy portion be with the true people of God."

my portion be with the true people of God." Another incident occurred while I was officiating as rector of St. Paul's, which has also been hereto-fore published but which, perhaps, will bear repeating as an illustra-tion of the absurdity of any Pro-testant denomination presuming to call itself Catholic. I was officia-ing one Sunday in Trinity Church, the rector being temporarily ab-sent. At that time I was quite high church and accustomed to ring the changes on the claim that we were true Catholics- not Roman, you know. On retiring after the service, I had reached the vestibule when I was met there by three Irish-men who had apprenchy just arriv-ed from a journey. They approached me variantication that we when I was met there by three Irish-men who had apparently just arriv-ed from a journey. They approached me respectfully, tipping their hats, when one asked "Your reverence, is this the Catholic Church?" In-scinctively and without time for re-flection I replaced: "No, my good man, this is not the Catholic Church. You see that tower over there above the houses-that is the Catholic Church." Imagine my mor-tification when I had time to real-"Ze how completely and unconscious-ly I had simply given myself away. It was only another practical filus-tration of the truth of the saying of St. Augustine, that a stranger going i's any town and enquiring for the Catholic Church would never be pointed to a schismatical con-venticle, but to the place of wor-ship of the real, old Catholic Church unversitive recentized as uch. ship of the real, old Catholic Church venticle, but to the place of wor ship of the real, old Catholic Church universally recognized as such. Well, thank God, I had the grace at last to cast my lot with the favored children of Holy Mother Church and to enjoy its inestimable privileges for fifty years, and here by the great mercy of God, I am to-day in my eighty-eighth year in good health and spirits. But I am fully conscious that I am rapidy approaching the end of my jour-ney. If by this last appeal I should succeed in inducing even one enquir-ing soul to examine and embrace our holy Faith how happy I should be! I have vivid recollection, even to this late day, of dear old St. Faul's (where and what is it now?) it dear friends, its personal attach my heart. If I failed in my duty to any during the ten years of my ser-vice I carnesity beg of the good and for the repose of the souls of those who have gone before and if any of those are still living who predicted that I would discover my mistake and return. I hope this letter with convince them that they probaby mever made a greater mistake in their lives.

If thou truly lovest God? it is of thy heart, thy tongue, and thy works that thou must ask it. - St. Bonaventura.

Bonnventura. All the commandments of the law are reduced to loving God and our neighbor. . . What moral could be more pure, what doctrine more su-bline, more worthy of a God, more expedient to nature and to man-kind, than that which reduces all to love of God and of our neighbor; which defines this love; the faithful practice of the commandments, or the conformity, the identity of our will with that of God, and which, in order to excite us to this love, shows us that God, that Jesus Christ, has loved us first.--D'A-guesseau.

A Scotch lawyer was well reprov-ed when, seated by a lady fully aware of her own plain looks, hav-ing bowed to his hostess in giving the toast, "Honest men and bonnie lasses," she rejoined, raising her own glass, "We may both drink that toast, since it refers to neither of us."
