The Disciplinarian A Company Commander's Story

(By Capt. H. B. C. Pollard.)

"What was left of the company," said the captain, "lay out in the darkness in front of the German trenches at Passchendaele. We had, of course, no regular line of trenches, but were just taking what advantage we could of the line of shell craters. It was one of these steady thrusting operations, you know. Periods of intensive bombardment, then a short push for objectives less than a mile away.

"Our brigade had been fairly fortunate for it was already our third day in the affair. Casualties were beginning to tell, and an unfortunate burst of fire from a German heavy battery had rather reduced the company. I commanded. Sitting there in the mud and darkness, and as it was a very miserable day was no joke, as anyone who knows the Ypres salient will testify, but as it happened, communications were good, and we had plenty of food and ammunition brought up. Finally I got a message from the C.O. telling us the time and objectives of the morning attack.

"I got messages through in the dark, and gathered all the non-commissioned officers of my company, and as we were so short of men, nobody was to fall out even for a moment to attend to casualties. We had not a man to spare. If anyone stopped the barrage lifted, I would not be held responsible. Besides, the stretcher-bearers would be close up the moment the barrage lifted. I was particularly careful upon this point, and told them that it did not matter who fell—myself or anyone else—one was to take any notice, and the attack was to be pressed home, leaving the casualties to be picked up by the stretcher-bearers following.

"Next morning the light was fairly high before the moment came. In front of us the low ridge was crowned with flame and wreathing smoke, and the air was shrieking with British shells. Precisely at the appointed time the fire curtain lifted, and clambering out of my crater, I saw my men emerging from their shell holes right and left of me, stumbling forward over the tumbled clay of the battle-ground.

"We had gone twenty yards or so before the German counter-barrage opened up. The earth round us shook and trembled, and then the whole grey field seemed to rise up on end sheer to the sky and hit me in the face.

"About two hours after that I recovered consciousness, and found myself in the bottom of a deep shell crater. My tunic was half torn off and my shoulder had been hastily dressed with a field dressing, then bandaged with strips of grey army shirt. I was quite alone, and the first clear thought that came into my head was that someone had disobeyed my orders: no one should have stopped to bandage me!

"No," said the captain, "I never found out who it was. They told me in the hospital that but for the dressing I should have died to death, so I wrote to the man who is now commanding what remains of the company, and the man who I was that had saved my life. This is what he writes: 'The men know who did it, and it is really quite a joke among them, but nobody will own up to it because they are all convinced that your internal sense of discipline will bring the man a go of punishment for neglect of orders.'

"What I really want," said the captain, "is to send him or his wife a ten-pound note. But there, you see, what discipline is in a real good company."

A TENNYSON IS IN DISGRACE

Grandson of Dead Poet Laureate Figures Badly in Divorce Case

Captain Adrian Bethell's divorce of his 21-year-old wife—Lord Gloaguer's daughter and Mrs. Asquith's niece—with Lord Tennyson's son, Lionel, as co-respondent, is the social sensation of the moment. There were few lovelier girls in society than the Hon. Clarissa Tennant.

When she married the then Lieut. Bethell, six years ago, in August, 1915, the wedding at St. Margaret's, Westminster, was an event of the season. The bridegroom, then in his twenty-fifth year, is the only son and heir of a wealthy Yorkshireman, the owner of Walton Abbey, his late mother being a sister of Lord Middleton.

The co-respondent, Major Tennyson, was wounded for the fourth time a few weeks ago. He is the Hampshire cricketer who sprang into fame in 1913 by scoring three centuries in his first four matches in county cricket. The Surrey batsman, J. B. Hobbs remarked at the time that Tennyson was "one of the finest amateur batsmen in England."

Like his father, he bears the Christian name of Hallam. Hallam was the present Peer's godfather and when he walked to the front with the bride, Lord Laurence had asked what the boy's name was to be. "Hallam" said Tennyson. "Why not Alfred?" asked the godfather. "Ay," answered Tennyson, "but suppose he should turn out a fool!" Lord Gloaguer, Mrs. Asquith's father, is the father of the bride. Lord Gloaguer's father, the late Sir Charles Tennant, the Scotch millionaire and consequently brother to Mrs. Asquith. Sir Charles Tennant, by the way, made his fortune out of the Mysore Gold Mine. Mrs. Bethell's mother, Lady Gloaguer, sister of the late Mrs. George Wyndham. Lord Gloaguer has lovely pictures, and his wife has literary tastes. Last year their eldest son, a brilliant boy of 19, a lieutenant in the Grenadier Guards, fell in action.

All managers of this hotel agree over been in the lead to hold out the hand of fellowship to women. When it became inevitable that women would invade those occupations held by men, the Marthas Washington bade them welcome.

As there were women already being employed in the hotel, the elevator girls were not a new thing. They were a regular part of the hotel's staff, and were known to the guests. They were a regular part of the hotel's staff, and were known to the guests.

HEAVY MEAT EATERS

HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Back-ache or have Bladder trouble.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become over-worked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood; then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular or painful, or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before a meal, and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with other ingredients, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful, effervescent, urine-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.
