'PHONING ACROSS THE SEA

Experiment to be Tried With a Columbia Professor's Invention.

fresh experiment is to be made A fresh experiment is to be made with a method of promoting submarine telephony devised several years ago by Professor M. I. Pupin, of Columbia University, says the New York Tribune. It consists of the introduction, at carefully computed intervals, in a cable of what electricians call "choking coils." These increase the distance at which speech can be made audible, not by magnifying the sound, but by lessening the rapidity with which electric vibrations die out. According to the London magnifying the sound, but by lessening the rapidity with which electric vibrations die out. According to the London Times, the British Government—doubtless in co-operation with that of France—has decided to lay a cable prepared in this manner across the English Channel. As it will connect with land lines at Dover and Calais, it is expected to facilitate telephonic communication between London and Paris. Though some use of Professor Pupin's invention has been made in the United States to enhance the efficiency of the American Bell Telephone Company's overhead wires, it has thus far had only one trial under water—on a telephone cable which crosses Lake Constance—from Switzerland to Germany. As for some reason the pioneer experiment has not proved entirely satisfactory, the outcome of the second trial under water will be awaited with exceptional interest.

If in this instance the system should work perfectly it is not unlikely that

If in this instance the system should work perfectly it is not unlikely that there would be a fresh discussion of the feasibility of transatlantic telephony. has repeatedly been pointed out t even if all the technical difficulties in the way of such an enterprise should be overcome it might not prove commercially successful. The hours during which a telephone line between New York and London would be patronized would be limited, and the cable devoted to such service would cost much more than one for telegraphy alone. It is to be remembered, however, that a cable remembered, however, that a ca equipped with "choking coils" could equipped with chasing coils could be employed for telegraphy as well as telephony. It would not necessarily lie idle, therefore, when it was not for conversation. Indeed, experts say that it would work better than any other telegraph cable of the same length.

The newspapers of Edmonton say that public opinion in favor of the union is rapidly growing n the "suburbs" across the river. In the meantime the people of both places indulge in remarks about each other which are not by any means as mild as those exchanged between Toronto and Hamilton. All of which having been explained, eastern readers will understand the feelings of the people of the town finmed after him, when Lord Strathcona in his first speech after his arrival there recently told of the pleasure with which he had looked forward to visiting "this great city of Edmonton."
