his party on the question. Sir Henry bore the brunt of the fight for several years in the House of Commons. He bore, too, the obleany that sprang from public anger over his pro-Boer attitude. He was never seriously accused of disloyalty, and his tinge of pro-Bocrism was long ago forgiven by the public.

While Sir Henry was universally respected, he was never regarded as a great political leader, in the sense that Gladstone and Harcourt were leaders. Personally popular and of a most genial disposition, he never showed the force necessary to dominate a He stood well enough

By no means strong in debate, and by no means able as an orator, Sir Henry was yet a powerful factor in the House of Commons. Beside Gladstone, whom he succeeded in the Liberal leadership, Sir Henry did not compare either as orator, debater or writer. Yet in his way he was probably even more attractive than Gladstone. While he was never worshipped as a hero, he was always prized as a personal friend.

By no means strong in debate, and important session of parliament, it is quite possible that the new premier will content himself with only absolutely necessary changes.
