A NEW VISION
OF CHRISTIANITY

Rev. R. J. Campbell, of England, Addresses Large Audience at Toronto.

DEMOCRACY AWAKENED

He Believes New Forces Will Relegate War and Purify Social Depravity.

Toronto, Nov. 25.—Rev. R. J. Campbell, of the famous City Temple, London, England, enunciated his new theology, "Liberal Christianity," at the Bond Street Congregational Church last night. As he stood in the pulpit, a trim, graceful figure in black, with spare, ascetic face, dominated by flashing dark eyes and crowned by silver-white hair, speaking his sage in a voice, cultured and unaffected and with a kindly wistful note, the level of the individual conscience was far higher than what found expression in the courts and chanceries. The law of the jungle still obtained in international politics. Years ago Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's twoice, he would enjoin them to think internationally. A new spirit was animating democracy and statesmanship in Great Britain at all events, which would ultimately make war impossible. (Applause.) He did not mean The Hague or ministerial peace deputations, but the force back of both with which statesmanship had to reckon. He meant the awakening of the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, in the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, in the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, in the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, in the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, in the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, in the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what is going to make war impossible, the social conscience among the toil-frs. "That's what flashing dark eyes and crowned by silver-white hair, speaking his message in a volce, cultured and unaffected and with a kindly wistful note, the young apostle of Christ brought 1,500 people, who crowded the auditorium, under the magic spell of his personality and unfolded a new vision of Christianity. They hung on his words and broke in with frequent outbursts of applianse.

After delivering his lecture on "Liberal Christianity and the Social Movement," Mr. Campbell preached a sermon which formed the spiritual correlative of his address.

Liberal Christianity.

"Liberal Christianity stands for four things," the speaker said, in opening: "the humanity of God and the Divinity of Man; the thorough and fearless application of the scientific method to religion regardlesss of dogmatic pre-suppositions; the recognition of the solidarity of all human life and the consistent application of the solidarity of all human life and above all things, the proclamation of the solidarity of all human life and above all things, the proclamation of God."

He traced the origin of the term, "the Kingdom of God," to the early Jewish belief that Jehovah was their divine sovereign only and they were the terrible concomitants of this gonly people. Isaiah, in 800 B. C.

The Kingdom of God," to the early Jewish belief that Jehovah was their divine sovereign only and they were the terrible concomitants of this wish only people. Isaiah, in 800 B. C., had purified this pathetic belief, in his vision of the union of the Assyrian and Egyptian in a common brotherhood with Israel, under the divine sovereignty of God. Then the speaker referred to the frequent use which Christ made of the words, "Kingdom of God," showing that Christianity and membership in the Kingdom of God was not an outward state, but rather a new spirit in men, Christ, he said, had put no faith in any institution which had not behind it the formed spiritual consciousness of the people who were to benefit by it.

Must Think Internationally.

Freeklessness, animalism and brutality were the terrible concomitants of this were the terrible concomitants of this poverty. Gen, Booth had once said that it was impossible to save a man with cold feet, and he had spoken wisely.

The new movement aimed not merely at providing earthly things, but at the development of the soul and making of men good, wise and loving. This could never be accomplished while the struggle for a living existence was what it is. It kept many at the brute stage who had the capacity for greater things. This was the great day, the day of the Church's opportunity.

And therein was the solution of their problems today. Brute force twas still the main force to be reckoned with in international relations today. The grim spectre of war always lurked behind all their diplomatic courtesies. England and France joined together in an entente cordiale because they both feared Germany. The continuance of the present naval policy of the British Government would mean a tremendous increased taxation during the next ten years. What the upshot would be, nobody knew. The increasing population of Germany needed an outlet, and naturally they looked upon some of the fine British possessions as suitable for occupation. Great Britain could not make any high moral rebtike, since she held one-fifth of the area of the globe. Her or brigandage was done before Germany had had a chance to get in. In the United States, Mr. Campbell said he had asked the Yankees to let bygones be bygones and come under the British flag, but the nearest they seemed to want to get to it was to take Canada under the Stars and Stripes. The imperial revenue, which this year would amount to about $1,000,000,000, would be expended mainly in paying the debts of past wars and in preparing for any future wars. Why one
