The grand feature of our Canadian for is the thorough enjoyment it provides for young and old. Instead of the "fearful credited with being aristocratic. The skaters and curlers amicably allow each other the ice three nights a week in the covered portion, but the skaters reign supreme on the outside rink. A good band makes things lively. Next comes the Caledonian rink, Mutual street. The managers have been exerting themselves lately. The World hardly recognized the eld place where it used to skate long ago. Over $15,000 have been spent in improvements. The skating area has been enlarged to 100 by 150 feet, and a 60 feet truss roof erected. The proprietors now proudly boast that they have the largest covered rink in the dominion. The curlers have a three-night's use of the skating surface. They say they can play six rinks at a time. Moss Park might be fittingly called a people's rink. Here every step in the social ladder is represented from the school boy to the bank elerk, or the every day girl to the standoff "aristoquatto" lady. This rink also deals in the superlative degree, they love to apeak of themselves "as the largest skat] ding rink in the dominion." The Spadina avenue is sometimes nicknamed the Sunday school rink. This is where all the young Methodists and Presbyterians of the west and are to be found. Since the rink entirely, and a band is in attendance every night. All the rinks have been at The World to order up hard frost every time in the probabilities. We promised to use our influence.

Two men-at-arms came riding slowly
Adown the green path, smooth and clear;
One held the rank of sergeant lowly,
The other that of brigadier.
The brigadier cried, "Brave Pandore,
"Brigadier," laughing cried Pandore,
"Brigadier," laughing cried Pandore,
"Brigadier, right you are again!"

"It is no easy matter, surely,
"To guard the peasant in his cot,
To hoid the cities so securely
That theves break in and plunder not;
And yet the wife whom I adore
In safety dwells where Love doth reign."
"Brigadier," laughing cried Pandore,
"Brigadier, right you are again!"

"For Glory's wreath of fairest flowers
With rose and laurel intertwined;
For Love and War, Immortal powers.
I live—and cast the rest behind.
The Power that Jason led of yore
I chase and trust the prize to gain."
"Brigadier," laughing cried Pandore.
"Brigadier, right you are again!"

"It brings bright days of youth before me;
That past now gone beyond recall,
When Beauty flung her fetters o'er me.
I came submissive to her call.
And yes—the heart breaks o'er and o'er
The strongest links of Cupid's chain."
"Brigadier," laughing cried Pandore,
"Brigadier," ght you are again!"

As Pheebus hid his glories under
The golden clouds that veil the west,
Our hero with his voice of thunder
Still broke the evening's quiet rest.
"Fareweil!" he cried, "on distant shore
"Your light will gild both hill and plain."
"Brigadier," laughing cried Pandore;
"Brigadier, right you are again!"

He ceased—and now their horses tramping
Fell softly on the yielding ground,
And save their iron bridles champing,
They passed along and made no sound;
But when Aurora smiled once more
One still might hear the faint refrain—
"Brigadier," laughing cried Pandore,
"Brigadier, right you are again!"
