ASTAPOVA, Russia. Nov. 17.—Althohope has not yet been given up, the attendants of Count Tolstoi recognize that his life is in the balance, and that altho the strong constitution of the great Russian has carried him thrust other grave struggles against disease, his system has become so weakened and his heart has responded so feebly to restoratives, that it will be next to a miracle if he recovers from his present attack.

An exhortatory telegram, addressed to Tolstoi by Antonius, metropolitan of St. Petersburg, presiding over the synod, and the departure of Bishop Cyril for Astapova, mark the extreme solicitude of the church to gather Tolstoi into its folds. At the time of the writer's serious illness at Crimea, in 1900, a similar exhortation was sent to him, and secret orders were despatched to Crimea, to allow only the representatives of the church entrance to the bed-chamber during his dying minutes, as the synod had determined at any cost to hury him. On that occasion, when he regained consciousness, Tolstoi directed an answer to the clericals:
