NO PASTE ON LABELS.

The Bredin Bread Co. Give Some Light on Bread Labels.

To the Editor:

In this morning's World report of proceedings of the legislative committee of the city council the heading in large print is, Bakers Want the Label.

Then the report of the discussion which took place on this question ends with the false or erroneous statement that adhesive paste was used in affixing labels. Now, sir, to allow this statement to go uncontradicted would work a great injury to our trade.

The department handling this matter has never to my knowledge had any one of its officers visit any of the large bakeries for the purpose of seeing for themselves how the labels are put on, and in our case they are welcome at any time to drop in, as also the public at large are free to call and see for themselves, not only how the labels are put on, but how their bread is being handled all thru its manufacture, and I believe this offer holds good with the great majority of our competitors.

For the benefit of those who cannot see the process for themselves, we beg to inform them that the labels are made from a good clean paper and are simply dropped in the bread pan and the loaf of soft dough set on it. When it adheres at once without any necessity for either gum or paste, which the writer has never seen used.

The public are led to believe from the present outcry against the label that it is a new thing. "No ourselves used a label for some time, eleven years ago; the union label has been in use for about twelve years without objection from our health authorities or sanitary grounds. Now surely placing the weight on the label does not render it unsanitary, and if not, why was not this fight against it entered on previously? And then, as to the weight being on the label, what can be fairer to the public than seeing exactly what weight they are supposed to get in each loaf they purchase? Our firm are to-day turning out a large sale, although the people using it know they can have a loaf from us weighing 20 ounces, but not as high a quality. Some people do not seem to recognize that a change has taken place in the people's tastes, that they want bread to-day which costs more to make apart from the present advance in prices of wheat and flour.

Now, there can be no fairer or simpler method than varying the weight of the loaf, as in most cases it will mean less than one cent, which is the least money value we can alter it by, and as we can stay in business by selling to our customers and the public, surely we have the same rights as other tradespeople have to supply a five-ounce loaf, containing all the people wish for, and we say it is, but in closing do not forget that there is neither gum nor paste used in putting on the label.

Yours sincerely,

The Bredin Bread Co., Ltd.

M. Bredin, president.
