That distinguished explorer and velopment of interest in the ice-bound southern continent.

Sympathy will be felt with Lieutenant Shackleton in that he so nearly achieved complete success. It must have cost him a pang to call a halt only a little over a hundred miles from his goal. Evidently the south pole will not long remain unconquered, and had the Antarctic call been as strenuous and constant as that of the Arctic it would long ago have been attained. The story of this latest expedition shows the advantages attending land travel under difficulties such as attend Arctic exploration. Had there been a continent in the far north it would not have proved so hard a nut to crack nor entailed careful study or the currents that have so often paffled the best enterprise and endurance. Lieutenant Shackleton's journey has been rewarded by important geographical and scientific results and official recognition will without doubt attend the skill and courage he has

KEEPING THE GRAIN TRAFFIC. By reducing the rates on grain order to recover for New York the traffic that last year followed the cheaper Canadian route, the United States railways have made it imperative that the advantage gained by Canada be not lost. The prospect of a keen struggle for western grain shipments makes it all the more necessary to improve the Canadian waterways and to open up the still shorter Hud- ed7 son Bay route. Homesteaders are rapidly taking up the new and fertile. ands of the Dominion West and there will be in the near future a vast increase in the quantity of grain requiring transportation. Canada cannot afford to delay the provision of adequate shipping facilities on to make the most of her geographical position, and her unrivaled opportunities to handle the product of the/great graingrowing states. A bold and confident policy is wanted and will pay best in the end.

GERMAN METHODS. England has made Germany a rival feared by reason of a free market for the products of German workmen, German workmen became skilled workmen by the English market thrown open to them. German workmen, especially in engineering and shipbuilding, were ready to duplicate, in some cases to exceed, the advances made by British engineers and British shipbuilders. German workmen more or less in the shape of spies, were welcomed in English shops and shipyards and were able to take home the latest ideas and reproduce them there.

Germans are acquiring the English speech at a rapid rate in many cases from a purely hostile motive.

But besides this Germany has Agency 170 Madison-avenue.
