

Stern Winter still retains its sway
O'er nature's once enamell'd mead;
The fields their fleecy robes display,
And flow'rs and landscapes all are fled.

" Bless my heart, mother, here comes Tim Twilight the pedlar again to wish us a happy new year. Well uncle Tim, it is just a year to a day since you were here before and sold me " the life and adventures of Betty Buttermilk, dairywoman to the Duchess of Dumdielikes. Come, let's see, what have ye now, old daddy?" " Why, my pretty damsel, here's the works of Sir John Sinclair, the great Scotch farmer. Here's another book called The Guide to Health. Showing how a diligent hand maketh rich. Here's another, called the Great Quiltrey at farmer Cleverley's. Hah! what say ye to reading the life of My Lady Lummocks? But here's the best of all, The Nova-Scotia's advertisement. Mind ye I sell no spurious wares. Look at the title page and you'll sensibly see. Be particular; none genuine but what has this title page. So my good friends, I must bid you good bye. If Providence give me leave, I'll call again in '23—you may read over what is here in haste pen'd down; it will serve to pass a winter evening or so.—Good bye t'ye.
