WARSHIPS FOR CANADA REACH HALIFAX TODAY

it is essential that you shall maintain, and which I am confident you will. "I appreciate that it is a hard task set you so soon after commissioning and at the end of more than 4,000 miles of continuous steaming to co-operate in gunnery and torpedo exercises with the ships of the North America and West Indies squadrons, but since I am given to understand by the commander-in-chief that Canada looks for in her new navy, and I am convinced, does not look for any such combined exercises for many months. I am sure you will do all that is possible to obtain the benefit of efficiency and again that the British navy proved that the harder the task the stronger the incentive to master it, and that is the spirit that Canada looks for in her new navy. After your exercises the Pacific coast of Canada looks forward to welcoming you, and when, in the end of May, you have returned to the Atlantic, I trust that you will do all that is possible to obtain the benefit of efficiency and again that the British navy proved that the harder the task the stronger the incentive to master it, and that is the spirit that Canada looks for in her new navy.
