LANSDOWNE'S POPULARITY.

(New York Times.)
Lord Lansdowne and his friends can hardly fail to note that in the case of the second, as of the first, of his letters advocating immediate negotiations for peace the only praise comes from Germany and her confederates. They like his proposals immensely, and still more his expressed and implied criticisms of the Entente leaders.
This may be taken by Lord Lansdowne as showing simply that his antagonists at home are obstinately wrong, but as he is not, in purpose at least, a pro-German, one would expect him to be somewhat disquieted by the sharp geographic line separating his admirers and those who denounce him. German commendation is a heavy burden for any decent man to carry in these days. It is intolerable burden it ought to be. Every time Lord Lansdowne takes his pen in hand he strengthens the suspicion that what he fears is not so much a prolongation of the war as an ending of it likely to be injurious to his own class. This charge is probably an unjust one, but his letters give it a dreadful plausibility.
