

Thousand Crowns of Gold, which remained due (by France to the House of Savoy) as part of the Dutcheſs-Royal's Portion, together with the accruing Interest of that ſaid Sum, which was alſo promiſed to be paid : And the Remainder, (viz. One Hundred Thouſand more, which the Duke of Savoy ſhould pay to France, to make up the Portion aforeſaid) the King doth Remit, in Conſideration of the preſent Treaty ; his Royal Highneſs engaging moreover, to give to the Princeſs, his Daughter, at the Celebration of the Marriage, that, which in the Language of Piedmont, is called Fardle ; and in French, the Bundle, or Marriage Preſent, for Cloaths ; and in the Contract of Marriage, the Dowry ſhall be agreed upon, which the King will give according to the Cuſtom of France.

IV.

That his Royal Highneſs, renouncing from this preſent time, truly, and effectually, and ſincerely, (as he hath done in the fore-mentioned Articles) all the Ingagements which he might have had with the Enemies, doth likewise hope, that his Maſteſty will anſwer thereunto, with all the Sentiments which his Royal Highneſs craves and wiſhes for ; and that having the Honour to be ſo nearly related to the King, and of entring into a new and glorious Alliance with him, his Maſteſty doth Grant and Promiſe, to his Royal Highneſs, as he doth demand, his powerful Protection, as formerly, in all its Extent ; and as his Royal Highneſs is deſirous to maintain a perfect Neutrality with the Kings, Princeſs, and Sovereign Powers, who are at preſent his Allies, his Maſteſty doth promiſe, not to put any manner of Reſtraint on the Inclinations which his Royal Highneſs hath, of continuing and uſing towards them, all the external Meaſures of Decency