"My messenger may arrive any time within the next hour," he said. "You will therefore be ready for your fate, whatever, it may be. Should we have been betrayed, and should a rescoing party be sent with him, you will instantly be shot. Should you see him wave a white handkerchief, it will mean that you are free; should he wave a red one, you will feel the sharpness of this knife."

Carlo replied only by a slight gesture. His dignity appealed to Brancaleone, who dyed him ourrously, knowing that never before had he met with such a prisoner.

"Rooco! Maso! take your places!" he called, peremptorily.

Two of the mea instantly threw down their cards, and Carlo found himself taken to that und of the building which was furthest from a dark archway, presumably leading to another catacomb, and thence to the upper air. On either side of him stood a ruffianly-looking Neapolitan, with a loaded pistol held within a few inches of his temples; and to the right hand, and a little in advance of the others, sat the chief, estentationally sharpening his knife. It was an ordeal that would have tried the strongest nerves; the horrible, grim suspense of it was a torture such as Carlo had never conceived; and nothing but long practice in self-contrel could have enabled him to keep up ander the sickening anticipations of the butchery that was soon to take place. With a strong effort he turned from such thoughts, not even allowing himself to watch the dark archway opposite, where his imagination keep jucturing a confusion of red tokens and white tokens, until he was as much dazzled as Gigi used to be over the Pears' soap puzzle in England. With a pang he remembered that he had never asid good-bye to the little fellow, and a hundred trifling recollections of unfinished work rushed through his brain, till a flash of Brancalcome's knife in the torchilght readled him to the terrible present. Then he fixed his eyes staddly on the cross of which Lionbruno was carving, and again the thought of his visible surroundings.

Six thousand of these chests carry enough poison to destroy the whole of earth's inhabitants, while the 80,000 annually imported under England's auspices, would destroy the life of twelve worlds similar to our own. It has recently been affirmed by an educated Chinese Empire are opinm smokers, while twenty-five millions are, beyond recovery, its abject alaves. Yet England advertises its opinm depots in the railroad cars of the East India Government, and the evil is belting the world. The secret of it all is that nearly thirty millions of accursed gold coming from this traffic pass into the exchequer of the British Government in India. Yet the Logdon Times makes the atrocious statement that when one year ago the British Parliament adopted a resolution declaring that "the system" by which the Indian opium revenue is raised in merely indeensible, "The House of Commons was simply having one if its too familiar spasms of cheap Puritanism." Every effort is made by the British Government in India to increase the sale of opium. A penalty at the rate of five rupees per pound on the quantity of opium required to make up the stated minimum must be paid by every licensed dealer who does not sell a certain amount of opium within a certain time. England has cleared itself from the crime of slavery. It fairly reels to-day under the stupor of drink, and but for this its brutality in continuing to poison the human brain in the Orient by the enforced sale of opium would be inconceivable, but in a mation staggering under the effects of alcoholic stimulants, no degradation can surprise us.

Our navs, money and highways are all in the hands of monopolies and the government is a police agent to hold the people by the throat while the monopolists go through our pockets.—Christian Guardian.

The Voice has submitted a series of questions to managers of railroads throughout the country. The result of the inquiry is a serious warning to the so-called "moderate drinker." Not only does he stand second in the race for advancement in competition with the total abstainer, but most compenses are emphatic in their declarations that no drinking man whatever can find employment with them. Nor is the rule of total abstinence declared necessary to success in the railroad business alone's one
