When a horse picks up a nail in his foot what does the driver do? Does he whip the limping, lagging animal and force him along? Not unless he wants to ruin the horse. At the first sign of lameness he jumps down, examines the foot and carefully removes the cause of the lameness. What is called "weak stomach" is like the lameness of the horse, only to be cured by removing the cause of the trouble. If you stimulate the stomach with "whiskey medicines" you keep it going, but every day the condition is growing worse. A few doses sometimes of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will put the disordered stomach and its allied organs of digestion and nutrition in perfect condition. Ninety-eight times in every hundred "Golden Medical Doscovery" will cure the worst ailments originating in diseases of the stomach. It always helps. It almost always cures. To cure constipation use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They're sure.

CONSULS CANADA

REPRESENTATIVES OF JAPAN AND RUSSIA IN THE DOMINION.

Sketches of Mr. Tutzzoro Neose, Consul General of the Japanese Government. and of M, de Strave, the Consul-General of the Russian Government in Cunada-Their Respective Colonies and Their Personal Habits.

The Japanese colony in Montreal is The Japanese colony in Montreal is not quite large enough for celebrating purposes, writes B. K. S. in Toronto News. There are eleven of them all told, and they range from the distinguished diplomat who occupies the Consulate-General to a few of his fellow-subjects, who are acting as confidential servents to Montreal citizens, and they include the representatives of a coupie of Japanese exporting houses, who are among Montreal's most intelligent business men. Under such circumstantial control of the control of business men. Under such circumstances it could hardly be said that there is any Japanese society in this city.

Curiously enough, the Russian Consul, who has thousands of subjects of his Imperial Majesty the isan within his territory, and several hun-dreds within a nile of his consulate, is in exactly the same position social loneliness as the representa-

Of Russian can have no dealings. Of Russians of the Eastern Church there are never more than a dozen in Montreal and most of them are birds of passage. The Russian Consul looks faithfully after the interests of the 31,231 Russians—Hebrews, Doukhobors and sectarians of one kind or another—in the Dominion, but he cannot very well feel any sentiment of fellow-nationality for them. His position is probably the more lonely of the two. The Japanese is assimilative, cosmopolitan, the Russian is reserved and strongly national.

Both consulates are well known to the official circle of Montreal as scenes of hospitality. But the Japanese consulate has its little circle of intimates—mostly members of the inner ranks of the Van Horne set—among whom Mr. Tatzzoro Nosse is a haif fellow well met. Small, alert, energetic, typically Japanese in essentials, and a thorough man of the world in externals, he is very much in demand just now as an authority on war rumors. on war rumors.

Mr. Nosse has some knowledge of the seat of war. He was an assist-ant Consul at a Corean seaport in 1885, in the early days of his diplo-1885, in the early days of his diplomatic experience, and in 1888 became Vice-Consul at Chee Foo, which consulate then looked after the port of Newchwang. In 1892, as a reward for brilliant services, he was made a full-fiedged Consul, and sent back to Corea, where he remained throughout the Chino-Japanese war, receiving the companionship of the Order of the Sacred Mirror, with a war medal and an Imperial Red Cross medal. In 1895 he was appointed Japanese Consul for the whole of Canada, with chancellery at whole of Canada, with chancellery at Vancouver. In 1899 he went back to Corea as Consul-General, which position he only left to establish the Consulate-General in Montreal in 1902.

The Japanese Consulate is one of the most delightful homes to which the social personages of Montreal cen secure entree. Mr. Nosse, in the course of his immense experience with the foreign trade of Japan, has acquired the tastes and instincts of a connoisseur of Oriental art, a hobby which he and Sir William Van Horne have pursued together with great enthusiasm. The consular residence one of the old mansions on Leaver Hall Hill, is a perfect treasure-house of Oriental workmanship, exquisite tapestries line the walls, facquer cabiacts and ancient Japan-se pottery are everywhere, and even the office is designed and finished in he lavish simplicity that the Japan-se know so well.

Madame Nosse is the only Japane lady in Montreal. Sie would sever, be a leader of society wher ever she might happen, for she has all the graces of Oriental hospital-ity. The Consul's two daughters he has not yet introduced to the stren-uous life of the West; they are at boarding school in Tokio. There is a sharp contrast between the representative of little, alert Japan and that of the tremendous northern bulk of Russia. But Mr.

the representative of little, alert Japan and that of the tremendous northern bulk of Russia. But Mr. de Struve is typical of only one phase of Russian character. In another walk of life he might very conceivably have been a Nihilist. He has the face and gentle abstracted manner of a dreamer of dreams. The course of his life has given his dreaming a somewhat practical turn, but he is not by nature a practical man. All his life he has wandered from capital to capital, studying mankind, their modes of life, their methods of dealing one with another, commercially and otherwise. The "great European question" interests him passionately; man as a subject of philosophic speculation is his hobby; but man personally interests him very little. But for his duties and his devotion to economic and political studies he would be a recluse. His house while well known to the his devotion to economic and politi-cal studies he would be a recluse. His house, while well known to the "official set" and popular with them, because of the unfailing geniality, the tact and the soft, appealing voice of its master, is not known to the out-side world, and is not a social cen-

He was appointed in 1899, while acting as Vice-Consul at Frankfort-on-Main, Germany. Since he came here he has been one of the most active of foreign representatives in the pursuit of information. hand.

According to Danish tradition, the scene of Hamlet's, or Amleth's, life has been definitely located at the Castle of Kronberg, Elsinore, on the ramparts of which the ghost walked. This castle is very ancient, but it is doubtful if it has been standing since the time of Prince Amleth, on whose life Shakernera's articles.

on whose life Shakespeare's creation is supposed to be founded. Near the castle is a garden that is called Hamlet's garden and is said called Hamlet's garden and is said by tradition to be the very spot where his father was killed. In a corner of the garden is a rude pile of stones that is pointed out as Hamlet's grave. In sight of the castle walls is another spot of equal interest. It is the bed of the old stream where, tradition relates, Ophelia was drowned.

Morning Waker.

A writer in The London Chronicle, noting a reference in Scribber's Mag-azine to a sign in a Dutch town "L. Y. D. Zwaan, Morgan Wekker" "L. Y. D. Zwaan, Morgan Wekker" (which means morning waker), notes that the industry is common in the districts where London workingmen live, and sixpence a week from each client is the usual "waker's" wage. All over London, too, policemen make a little extra in waking those whose work calls them early. He tells of seeing a South Kensington constable clambering suspiciously upon a wall. There the peace officer caught the end of a rope and pulled till an answering shout was heard. The constable explained that the other end of the rope was affixed to a baker's bedichtes.

According to the English theosophist, C. W. Leadbeater, ghosts are classified in seven types. These are: Thought forms, elves, churchyard ghosts, astral impressions, double of living man, animal apparitions and the genuine ghost.
