The Drink Curse.

talers Are 'Molly Coddles?'

The day has gone by when total abstainers could be dismissed with a cheap sacer, and public men, as a rule do not judge it wise to antagonize them by any ill-directed and untimely abuse. Quite a little flutter occurred in certain parts of the temperance ranks in the United States, a few days ago, by the report from Washington that Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief of the national pure food department, had, in a public address, chosen to characterize total abstainers as 'molly coddles,' and had said that it would be a sorry day for the country if liquor were basished, and that a young man should drink whisky to give him nerve, self-reliance, etc. The report toor its reputation on the face of it, but Dr. Wiley has cheen to give a public reply to the casard, and to make sure that it would not be garbled he has put it in writing. He says:

'I said I believed the general effect of alcohol on mankind was wholly bad; that it was bad even in small quantities; that if distilled beverages, such as whisky, brandy and rum had any good effects, they are due to the fact that the aromatic and fragrant tanbstances therein stimulated, the digestive secretions and thus overcame, to a certain extent, the bad effect of the alcohol they contained. I further said that I was in theory a prohibition, and that the better plan would be to abolish the saloons, and that if the people wanted to drink distilled beverages the proposed of the p

O, sad are the homes which the drink curse hath smitten,
And changed the sweet cradle song into a sigh;

Where those of the household the screen hath bitten,
And on the cold hearthstones they languish and die,

O figure is the relification.

Inguish and die.

O, fierce is the strife with this arch foe of gladiresa,
This traffic which thrives on the death of the soul;
But look up to Him who amid the world's madness.
Doth still all the issues of battle control.

O, sure is the victory for ev'ry brave soldier,
