Upon the Streets to day;
I look late their eager eyes,
Each on his arkines way.

Each bent upon his own pursuit
Of burgain or of sale.

Each in his brain, doth quick compute
His gain by box or bale,
And ruba his hands in proud delight,
Applaude each plan suyented,
Makes up his ledger for the night,
And puate his books contented.

Thou busy brother of the mart, A moment lend to me: Within the ledger of thy heart, What balance dost thou see?

Amid the columns clear and tall,
Do "gracious acts" appear?
Doth any "light of goodness" fall,
To make their mages clear? To make their makes crear?
Don't thou compute the ample gain,
From words and actions true?
If not, ah! cease thy labor vain!
And post thy books anew!

The lark rose in the arched skies, And showered upon my ear A Flood of glorious melodies,-It seems a spirit near!
The waving Gress flung from its blades
Overflowing benison,
And through the farry peopled glades

The blessings floated on ! With laden beart and beaming cyes. And fiappy, hearty looks, I count up all my merchandize, And close my Posted Books.

In mocd of holy harmony Sweet influence benignantly Sweet in needed being antity
Shines out upon my way;
Clear eyes in clearness answer mine,
Soft words in most meet fall.
The thoughts come truly and tenign,
And God doth gladden all!
My soul is bathed in costacy,

And leaps up with delight;
A band unseen doth follow me
And post my Books to-night! Ab! brother count thy richest wealth,

The wealth of noble being,

An honest heart, pulsating health,

A soul's wide stretch of seeing;

What eyes do loving follow thee.
What heart throbs at thy meeting,
What lips in blessings mention thee,
What hands grasp at thy greeting? If rich in these, thou'rt rich indeed,

Try soul in peace outlooks; poor.—go, feed thy shivering need, On more than Posted Books.
