CHAPTER XV. IDLE WORDS.

He looked around wildly. It was a lonely spot; there was no house nearer than the mill, over a mile away.

In another minute she opened her eyes and looked up into his; she smiled as she closed them again, and seemed to nestle closer to him, and, seeing this, the floodgates of Reuben's reserve were carried away by the stream of his love and adoration.

"My darling, my darling!" he cried coherently. "Olive, I love you—I cannot keep my secret any longer—I must speak. I love you!"

The face beneath his became warmer, grew presently hot and flushed, and with a deep sigh she moved to free herself from his grasp, and Reuben, overpowered by what he had done, placed her gently on a hillock of turf.

"Miss Olive," he said hoarsely, "forgive me—I never meant to betray myself to you. For Heaven's sake say you forgive my madness, and will go away at once—you shall see me again, never be reminded of my baseness to you when you are helpless. But first I must bring to you—"

Olive gathered her wet habit about her and shivered, while Reuben, his face now set and stern, looked back in the direction of the mill.

"Walk right on to the mill," he said; "the walk will revive you, and I will fetch you a carriage. Ah!" He stopped short as his keen eyes caught sight of a woman's figure not so far away. "Thank Heaven! It is the miller's wife."

He shouted, and the sturd, figure of a young woman soon approached them. To her Reuben explained the situation and bade her take Miss Seymour to the mill, while he went back to the Hall.

Olive strove to speak. "You cannot swim that torrent again," she said pleadingly. "I'd give my life to wipe out my insult to you," he replied, in a low voice. "Go now—and rest assured that I will never cross your path again."

Without waiting for another word or look, he plunged once more into the stream. On the opposite side he turned to wave his hand to Olive, then sprang on to his horse's back—the animal had waited patiently—and tore off to Bingleigh.

Here he found all in confusion at Olive's prolonged absence, and Sir Edwin's anxiety was not lessened by Reuben's wet and disheveled appearance. He was soon reassured, however, and set off in the carriage for Moorside Mill, leaving the steward, whom he had barely had time to thank, to revolve as best he could from his wet experience. But Reuben was in no mood to look after creature comforts; he had rashly sworn to remove himself from Olive's path, and he must keep his word.

With a smile to Topsy, who fussed around him, he strode off to his cottage, while the good-hearted maid hurried off to get ready for her mistress.

Meanwhile, Sir Edwin had hastened to his daughter's side. He found Olive quite restored, and her first thought was for Reuben. When assured of his welfare she was happy; to the future she gave no thought; Reuben loved her, and her alone—she trusted to that fact and her father's love to smooth the way for her.

Reuben, on returning to the cottage, had donned an old suit and made preparation for instant flight, and while Olive was questioning her father—her thought set upon the man who had not only risked his life for hers, but had declared he would not insult her by his love—Reuben himself was speeding on his way.

As he passed by Falcot he met Polly Styles, who stopped him. She was evidently waiting for some one, but Reuben was too anxious to get away to pay her much attention, and soon left her and all Bingleigh far behind him.

All night he walked, till in the morning, exhausted both mentally and physically, he stopped by a running stream to rest, and consider what to do in the future. He first thought of joining his grandfather; but as he had neither address nor knowledge of the company in which Wynter was traveling, he decided

Make 'em not at Chances if Child's Tongue is Coated

I cross feverish, sick, bilious, clean little liver and bowels.

A laxative to-day saves a sick child to-morrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, Mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is oftentimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

against attempting such a thing. Then again he knew his unhappiness would distress the old man, and at last he determined to try another country for a time.

Filled with this idea, he made his way slowly to Southampton. He walked the greater part of the way, for he had but a small store of money, and he knew he must make it last as long as possible. Almost tired to death, and with clothes stained and dusty, he entered the first inn in the town, and threw himself down on one of the rough settles in the parlor adjoining the bar.

Three men were seated there, smoking and drinking, and they looked up and greeted him with rough kindness. Reuben nodded wearily, but after a rest and some food, he was drawn into conversation with them. It seemed they were tired of England and were off to Australia, there to try their luck in the gold fields. As they talked, Reuben grew more and more interested: what was to prevent him from going, too?

"There's room for a chap over there," said one of them, a thickset, seafaring man. "Over here it's all work and no play—I'm off to Tom Tiddler's land, to pick up gold, if not silver." He laughed jovially. "Why not come with us, mate?" he said to Reuben, to whom he seemed to have taken a fancy.

"I think I will," said the young man. "If you'll have me for a partner; I'm not entirely penniless, though I look played out." "That's all right, mate," was the reply, and held out a horny hand which Reuben shook heartily. "We're all friends now, and we'll travel together—share and share alike."

On the following day, Reuben and three companions pooled their money and with it procured a rough-and-ready outfit, including revolvers. Then they made their way to a tramp steamer that was on the point of starting. Signing on as able seamen they would be able to get their passage, not only free of expense, but with profit.

Thus Reuben Wynter passed out of England with new companions, into a new life and a new world.

CHAPTER XVI. RECEIVED AND DISOWNED.

IN one of the bare rooms at the Grange old Griley stood talking to Morgan Verner. The younger man seemed to be shivering with cold, but, as a matter of fact, it was with nervous apprehension at the plan that the old steward had been laying before him.

"Come, pluck up courage, Mr. Morgan—be a man," croaked old Griley. "I'll have nothing to do with you," snarled Morgan. "I remember the mess you got us into with your plots and plans last time, if you don't."

"But, Master Morgan, I tell you he's gone for good. He went to the Hall to put the money and accounts in a drawer in the library. I watched him; then he comes back and tumbles up the cottage, drat him, and leaves this tied to the key, the young idiot."

Morgan snatched at the letter, which the old rascal held out to him, and both read it, old Griley commenting on it as he read.

"Sir Edwin will find the money and accounts in their usual places—ha, will he indeed?—and he trusts Sir Edwin will forgive him for flying from his post; but he flies from temptation—Ho! ho! laughed old Griley. "Come, Mr. Morgan, that proves us safer than ever." "I won't," retorted Morgan sullenly. "Another thing is, I can't. I'm going to meet some one—I dare say she's waiting now."

"She," echoed old Griley. "Well, let her wait—what else are women for?"

"She won't," muttered Morgan. "I suppose I've got to tell you—you inquisitive old fiend!" He looked around almost fearfully. "I've arranged to carry off pretty Polly Styles to-night."

Old Griley gave vent to a low whistle.

"Why, she's our young scamp's sweetheart, isn't she?" "Not she!" retorted Morgan contemptuously. "She looks higher than that—and she's worth it!"

"Yes, indeed, Master Morgan," croaked the old man. "You shall have 'em both." Then he chuckled maliciously, as a sudden idea occurred to him. "I've got it, Master Morgan—you shall have the girl and the money, and Reuben shall have the credit of both."

"What on earth do you mean?" said Morgan, interested at last.

"Don't you see," the other continued. "Polly disappears to-night—the money disappears to-night—and so does Master Reuben, who's a lovesick young fool. Now as he had the money, and folks say he's in love with the girl, what's easier to conclude than that the money, the girl, and the steward have all gone off together."

"By Jove," exclaimed Morgan. "Not a bad idea!"

"Why, it would be tempting Providence not to take advantage of such a chance," said Griley. Thus tempted and urged, Morgan finally yielded, and consented to dress himself as much like Reuben as possible, so that, in the case of meeting any one during their journey, he might be mistaken for the steward of Bingleigh. Clad in an old brown velvet shooting suit and a brown hat and the, any one might have been forgiven for making a mistake as to his identity. Thus equipped, the pair set off through the woods, on the other side of which lay Reuben's cottage. All here was quiet and tidy.

"It's soon done here," said Griley. "Toss those papers about—make it look like a hurried flight." He chuckled wickedly, as they ransacked the place which had looked such a picture of neatness when they entered. "That's right. Now for the hall."

(To be Continued.)

Hats are worn far down on the head, so far that they completely hide the eyebrows. There is no doubt but that the sash that is tied in a large bow in the back is smart. A charmingly simple dress is of white satin with collars and cuffs of pink crepe de chine.

A GOOD DRESS FOR THE GROWING GIRL.

Brilliantine, plaid or checked suiting, gabardine, poplin, voile or serge, are nice for this style. The waist is made with Norfolk plaits, and is lengthened by a gathered skirt, in moyenne effect. The closing is effected with a shield under the front. The sleeve, as one-piece model, is finished with a smart cuff.

This Pattern is cut in 4 sizes: 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Size 10 will require 3 3/4 yards of 44-inch material. A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

A NEAT HOUSE DRESS.

Now that housework has been promoted to domestic science, women are taking more interest in the style and kind of garments for home work. The model here portrayed has reversible fronts, good lines, ample fullness, and may be made with the sleeve in wrist or elbow length. Linen, khaki, drill, percale, lawn, dimity, cashmere and flannel may be employed, but the wash fabrics are most satisfactory for service and laundering.

The Pattern is cut in 7 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust measure. Size 38 requires 6 1/2 yards of 44-inch material. The skirt portions measure about 2 3/4 yards at the foot.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE FRENCH TROOPS.

ITALIAN HEADQUARTERS IN NORTHERN ITALY, Jan. 1.—The magnitude of the achievements of the French troops in the Monto Tomba region grows as full details are received. In addition to the 1,248 men, including 44 Austrian officers several of high rank, were made prisoners and a large number of guns captured, the booty includes sixty machine guns, several trench quick firers and a great deal of other booty, but the chief object of the stroke is the offensive tactics and stirring enthusiasm and sureness with which the French delivered their blow against the enemy lines.

LOYD GEORGE'S APPEAL.

LONDON, Jan. 1. Premier Lloyd George in his New Year message to the nation appeals to all at home to do their utmost for the cause for which the democracies of the world are leagued together especially by practicing economy and saving money to lend to the Government. The message concludes: "To every civilian I would say that your firing line is at the works or office in which you do your bit, the shop or kitchen in which you spend or save, the bank or post office where you buy your war bonds. To reach that firing line and to become an active combatant yourself there are no trenches to grope along, no barrage to face, no horrors, no wounds. The duty is clear before you, follow it and it will lead ere long to safety for our own people and victory for our cause."

OPERATIONS IN PALESTINE.

LONDON, Jan. 1. The official statement regarding the operations in Palestine, says: The latest information shows that the operations on this front were severe. It appears that on the 27th the enemy made with German assistance a determined attempt to retake Jerusalem. His attacks pressed with vigor and continued from 2 o'clock on the morning of the 27th for 46 hours. General Allenby immediately counter attacked against the west flank of the front on which the Turks attacked. On the 27th this attack progressed two and a half miles over very difficult country. Seeing that the Turkish attack was spent on the 28th, he made a general advance, the British on the Nablus (Shechem) Road advancing east and driving the enemy back before them. By the morning of the 29th General Allenby had secured a line of Burmahras el Tabuch ran-Allah el Fish-Wadi el Kiebl. Thus the result of the Turkish attack to recapture Jerusalem is that on the northwest we have gained several miles of ground instead of one. The Turks suffered heavily in killed and wounded, the killed alone being estimated at 1,000. So far 600 prisoners and 20 machine guns have been captured.
