Napoleon Twice Crowned.

The Imperial Coronation of Napoleon Bonaparte took place in the Church of Notre Dame, the ancient cathedral of Paris, in December, 1804. The crown, having been blessed by the Pope, Pius VII., Napoleon took it himself from the altar and placed it on his head; after which, with his own hands, he crowned his wife, Josephine as Empress. But to the Imperial crown was soon added a crown royal—for, following the example of the French, some of the people beyond the Alps requested Napoleon to accept the ancient Iron Lombard crown—the crown of Upper Italy. Therefore, on May 26, 1805, the ceremony was performed in the splendid but unfinished cathedral of Milan, the Archbishop of Milan officiating. Napoleon, however, was less reverential or ceremonious than he had been at Notre Dame; he seized the Iron crown and placed it on his brow exclaiming: "God has given it to me, woe to him who attempts to touch it." In the following month the old Genoese Republic was united, not to the Italian kingdom, but to France, and the Republic of Lucca was transformed into a principality, and given to Elisa, one of Napoleon's sisters, and her husband, Baciocchi, to be held as a fief of the French Empire. Thus, the military Republic of San Marino, with its two old cannons, and a population of about a thousand souls, was the only one left in the Italian peninsula. It is an independent State to-day.

Pepys and His Diary.

Pepys' Diary is surely the most interesting specimen of that kind of literature ever published, all the more so because he never intended anyone to see it, and wrote it in a difficult kind of shorthand. Born on Feb. 23, 1633 (3), Samuel Pepys was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, and took the degree of B.A. and M.A. On Dec. 1, 1658, he married Elizabeth St. Michel, a pretty girl of fifteen at St. Margaret's, Westminster. When he began his diary on Jan. 1, 1660-61, he was living in Axe Yard, Westminster, with his wife and one maid, on £50 a year. The same year, however, he became clerk to the Navy at £300 a year. Other offices were afterwards added to this, and his salary steadily increased. By the end of 1668 he had set up a coach with a pair of black horses, and wrote in his diary that he was mighty proud of it. He was a hard worker, often beginning work at four in the morning. He made himself thoroughly efficient in his department, and became one of the best "rulers of the King's Navy" that England has ever had. When he had done his daily work he believed in enjoying himself right well. Music and the theatre were his chief diversions, but any kind of amusement suited him, and he did not miss much. He put everything in his diary; it became a sort of cinema picture of the time, and as the period includes the restoration of Charles II., and the plague and fire of London, there is plenty of interesting matter, indeed, it is the best picture of that time that has come to us. Besides public and court affairs, Pepys put in all the little details of home life, what he had for dinner, when he drank too much, where he went on Sunday, with criticisms of the parson and the sermon, and any pretty girls who may have been in the congregation. At these details are very charming. He gave up writing the diary in 1669, because of weakness in his eyes, though he lived more than thirty years afterwards. He died at Clapham on May 26, 1703, and was buried at St. Olaves, Hart Street. The diary was found in the library of Magdalene College and was first published in 1825.

Just Folks

THE REAL CURE.

When a fellow's knocked out and he can't get about

And the doctor says, "stay there in bed"

When he's all aches and pains and the blood in his veins

Seems to flow like a fluid of lead, You may dose him with pills and with tinctures and squills,

But the cure for a man, after all, Are the roses of love and the glad voices of

The good friends who drop in to call. Shut him up all alone, and he'll lie there and groan

In the dusk of his dark, curtained room, And his cheeks will grow pale, and his spirits will fall,

And his face reflect only the gloom; Then no powder or pill can restore to his will

The courage to see the thing through, What he needs is the smile of a friend for awhile

Or the good that a few flowers can do. Any doctor will say, if you ask him to-day,

That with all of his wisdom and skill, Why he'd oft be dismayed were it not for the aid—

Of the friends of the fellow who's ill. That nothing he knows has the power of the rose,

Sent in by a friend who cares, To banish the gloom of an invalid's room,

And lighten the pain that he bears. Let us put a smile on your countenance. Try a bottle of Brick's Tasteless at Stafford's Drug Store. Price $1.00; postage 20c. extra—approx.
