AUSTRIA-HUNGARY

GROWS IN POWER Become Too Difficult to Manage

what already has been stated—Franz Ferdinand is a "pan-German." His ambitions are broader than Auktro-Hungarian alone. He seeks the ad-vancement of the interests of the en-

Teutonic race. Eut here is the difficulty. Frant Ferdinand considers himself the pro-videntially chosen individual to direc-this advancement. Needless to say Wilhelm has other ideas. His view

It looks as if Franz Ferdinand would be a formidable proposition for even the masterful Wilhelm to handle in two years, while still only heir to the thrope, the archduke has altered the entire European political situa-tion. At present he is the most feared and hated personage in the old world. And it is to be herne in mind that he has not yet attained to anything like what will soon be his full power. That come when he ascends the Aus of new men for positions of command. All his selections have turned out well. Next he took a hand in international affairs. He wanted to become foreign minister, but as this was impossible his nominee. Baron Aerenthal, was appointed. Aerenthal has been his puppet. Through him the archduke has come close to deposing Germany in Austria's favor as the paramount power in Europe.

His object now is to get the Turkish port of Salonika, as Austria-Hungary's southeasterly outlet to the Mediterranean. The Austrian grand of Bosnia and Herzegovina from Turkey was a step in this direction. Franz Ferdinand accomplished it with the assistance but against the wish of Germany.

Mr. Cornwall was a close friend of the witness, and the sale of the Atha-basca syndicate charter was discussed in a friendly way, and Mr. Cornwall asked him to act for him. The charter asked him to act for h.m. The charter was not considered very valuable, Mr. Bennett here read from an exhibit which gave the witness power to look after Cornwall's interests and profits. Judge Metcalle said the parties were anxious to get as much for their charter as possible, Cornwall seemed willing to dispose of his interests at whatever the other parties agreed to take. When the others had agreed, witness was to execute the documents witness was to execute the documents for Mr. Cornwal. Judge Metcalfe said that he knew that Mr. Minty was acting for the parties who were to take up the option. Mr. Bennett pressed the judge to say that he knew Mr. Cornwall had infinancial interests in the syndicate and was to get $100,000. The witness said he may have known that Mr. Cornwall had some interests, but his office file had no record. He un-derstood that Mr. Cornwall had an
