The thought passed her mind that she would like to see an American doctor—a man who would be gentle, soothing, and considerate, and on whose skill and honesty she could depend. These doctors seemed to her very strange people. Little Dr. Kraus was all the doctor she knew, except Dr. Lacelles. She would certainly never have employed Dr. Kraus in a critical case; and she quite as certainly had never dreamed of employing Dr. Lacelles professionally, however agreeable she might have found him as a gentleman. This doctor who was questioning her had thin, white hair and red eyes, and he looked sickly. By contrast, he recalled the figure of the doctor she had had at home, tall, strong, clean, and full of life and of gentleness. She could have dropped into his hands with strength enough for only one word, "Protect me!" and been sure that her house would have been a fortress against all intrusion; that whatever need she had would have been found out, every care provided, and her smallest flickering spark of life fed till it reached the full flame. There were such men in Rome; but she could not reach them. She had been taken possession of, and there was no help for her. The doctor went, but other people A gentleman and his wife came seated themselves in two chairs, and looked at her. They were familiar acquaintances, but none the less unwelcome now. They did not talk, and she tried to talk to them, having nothing to say. They went, and presently some man came about a repair needed in the house, and another with a little household bill, and she had to see them both. It would appear that the servant took no orders from her mistress; and whatever directions Miss Pendleestablished, would have interfered Miss Pendleton was shown in, and there was a repetition of their former interview. And again she went away, leaving Valeria exhausted. The next day she came again, bringing with her an American friend of Valeria's, who had just come to Rome, and was going immediately away again.

Mrs. Marvin was one of the sweetest of women, and as gentle as a dove. She had but just entered the church, and had all the enthusiasm of a convert, not only for the church, but for Catholics. She invested her Catholic friends with all the beauty of the doctrines in which they professed belief, and the virtues which they professed to practice. Simply and transparent- to do but to let herself be taken care honorable, she had no conception of of. dishonor under the garb of religion. Theoretically it might be possible, but

She had been talked to and prepared for this interview, and in adding her influence to further the object of it her diary that she must have taken she verily believed that she did ser- sick on the evening of the 27th of vice to God and to her neighbor.

Valeria was urged to leave her house and go to a certain hospital where she would have every care. She was told that she could never recover where

It was again a siege, with two voices instead of one. "You are nervous, and you need a particular cure," Mrs. Marvin said, in sweet, soothing way. Valeria thought that she was not mervous. She felt no excitement whatever, but only weakness and lassitude: but she did not contradict them. "I will go, if I can be quiet," she said at last; "but I cannot see to my apartment, nor to anything. I don't want to think. Cannot you see that "Everything shall be done for you," Miss Pendleton said eagerly; "we will take all the responsibility. I know a the rest of the winter."

"I think I may go to America in the spring," Valeria said. "I have had a letter from Sister Veronica, who is a nun in a Southern convent, and my dearest friend. I wrote them this sum- looking westward up Via Nera to mer that I was not well. They invite wait.

It was such a rest to think that she might leave all to some one. Her visitors both kissed her affectionately.

"I am so grateful to you," Valeria said to Mrs. Marvin. "Oh, it is nothing! Christians must do for each other must they not?" was the gentle reply. As they were going out of the door Valeria thought to ask, "Where is the place to which you will take me?" "In the Lungara! And she was to go there because she was nervous! In the Lungara was the great lunatic asylum of Rome, and they must have meant that. She had passed by its great iron gate more than once.

Valeria started up and began to walk the floor. She tried to think of some one to whom she could appeal. She remembered the American consul, and put her hand on the bell-knob to call her servant to go for him. But no, the girl would go to Miss Pendleton instead. And even if he should come, could she talk to him in a way to convince him that she should not go there? This fear and distress, added to her weakness, would confuse her, would agitate her.

She seated herself, and wrote a letter to the superior of the convent where Miss Pendleton lived. Her letter was blotted and her hand trembled so that she could hardly form a letter; but the meaning was plain. She begged Madame de la Roche to let her come to them for a little while. "All I want is rest and quiet," she wrote. "I do want care, but not the care of a lunatic asylum." Her letter was imploring, and showed that she was terrified. When it was ended, and she had sent the servant with it, she sank fainting on the floor.

"They could easily drive me crazy, or kill me in a short time," she thought, when she recovered. The note was left, but no reply was sent then

The next day Miss Pendleton and Miss Marvin came again.

They expressed warmly their regret for having disturbed her so much when they meant to do her good. She was soothed, and reassured, and coaxed. Madame de la Roche was very sorry not to be able to take her. Then Mrs. Marvin said that she had

No, she had never heard of it. But the word villa was pleasant. It promised a garden. Mrs. Marvin then described the place. It had large grounds and gardens, extending over a hill near St. Peter's. Don't open the door to anyone. I The house was fine, and Valeria's want to lie still and not speak all day, room would be the best in it. There were a few ladies there, who were not quite well, and wished to live quiet or a while. She need not have anybe any better just then. They had thing to do with them unless she plans which her health, if too quickly wished to. Her meals would be served to her privately, and she would have the attendance of a servant who would be the same as a maid, and every care necessary from a doctor and nurse. The view from the window was lovely. Over a near hill quite in the garden looked the dome of St. Peter's, not more than twenty rods ever seen.

It was the 18th of November. Looking over her papers she put some of them into her trunk, Valeria saw by way of happiness. It is the "Star of is the "Star of Health." It is the duty of every mother to point out this star and indicate this pathway to her daughters. There are too many unhappy-too many unhealthy women in the world. At every gathering where women meet alone, the story is heard of sickness and nervousness and despondency.

The woman who suffers in this way makes a mistake to consult the average obscure physician. If she does so, the chances are that she is told that her trouble is nervous-ness or insomnia or indigestion or heart trouble. It does not happen very often that this diagnosis is correct. When by some fortunate chance she is told the truth, that she is suffering from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism, she is told at the same time that she must submit to the obnoxious examinations and local treatment so embarrassing to a sensitive woman. All this is unnecessary.

The wise woman will seek the advice of some specialist of world wide reputation.

Dr. R. V. Pierce is such a man. For thirty years he has been chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. During that time, with the assistance of a staff of eminent physicians, he has treated thousands of ailing women. He is the inventor of that wonderful medicine for women known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This medicine acts directly on the delicate and important organs that make maternity pos-sible. It cures all weakness, disease, insible. It cures all weakness, disease, in-ternal ulceration and inflammation and debilitating drains. It has transformed thou-

From past experience it had been found that a report from a delegation was never presented, and he was opposed to the expense of a large deputation in this case. He moved that no more than four members of the committee go. Ald. Winnett said the clause gave the committee too much scope. Their trip should be restricted to Detroit. "As it is, they might get to Cuba." said Ald. O'Meara. "We'd better keep a check on 'em." Ald. Cooper moved that the chairman.

architect and city engineer form the delegation. "Why the engineer?" queried Ald. Graham, with feigned surprise. "He has never been consulted with regard to hospital matters before, and is it the intention to hold him responsible for the heating apparatus?" Continuing, he scored the aldermen for arranging this little junketing trip, and said the port from the deputations which they sometimes made a lot of fuss about ap-Ald. Stevely argued that at least four members of the committee should go on the deputation. He also pointed out that a new hospital at Cleveland should be visited.

Ald. Hunt said this deputation was a

Ald. Cooper's motion was lost, only Ald. Douglass. O'Meara and Winnett voting with the mover. Then Ald. O'Meara moved that the architect visit Detroit and report. "This is too thin," he said. "These deputations will so sicken the city that we'll certainly have to enlarge the hospital. (Laughter.) There's not a man on the committee that knows anything about heating apparatus. All they can do is to go and gape around. Not a deputation that has left here this year has brought in a report.

The motions of Ald. Greenlees and Ald. O'Meara were lost, and the clause was adopted.

INQUIRIES. To Ald. McCallum, the chairman of the board of works said work on the McFaulds drain would be started at once. Ald. McCallum had another question. It was as to what had been the cost of deputations this year, and as to a comparison with the expenditure of a similar nature in the preceding two years.

The mayor ruled that this request for the statement should be put in as a notice of motion. Ald. Taylor reported re ambulance fees that ex-Mayor Little, in his letter to the police commissioners when he donated the new ambulance, instructed them to make a charge for the ambulance, but not from indigent patients. The object was to have a fund for repairing the vehicle.

Ald. O'Meara said this had just been recommendation by ex-Mayor Little. Ald. Taylor asked for a report of the investigation committee re the alleged boodle case, and Chairman Winnett had none to give.

NUMBER OF LIQUOR LICENSES IN-CREASED. When motions were in order Ald. Carrothers sprung a mine. There were two license-holders in West London, he said, and the term of their licenses would expire before the next meeting of the council. They had supposed that their licenses would, after amalgamation, still be dealt with by the commissioners for Middlesex, but later they found out their mistake. It would be an injustice to them if the council did not grant them the licenses, he said. As it was a case of urgency, he asked that the mayor allow the bylaw to raise the number of licenses in the city from 34 to 36 be read a third time and passed at once. Ald. McPhillips seconded.

Ald. Winnett said the matter had been sprung very suddenly. He had never heard it mooted before. Legal complications might arise. The effect of the bylaw passed some time ago to reduce the number of licenses should be considered. It was a serious question, he said, especially when there were so many who were in favor of keeping down the number of licenses.

The division on the first reading was: Yeas-Ald. Taylor, McPhillips, Belton, Douglass, Jolly, O'Meara, Carrothers, Hunt and Dreaney—9. Nays—Ald. Winnett, Cooper, Wilkey, Nutkins, Gerry, McCallum, Greenlees, and Graham-8

Ald. Greenlees objected because all the members did not vote. The second reading went through, and Ald. Winnett asked for the ruling of the chair.

The Mayor—I will have to rule, as the council has sanctioned it, that the third reading can be given tonight.

Ald.Greenlees—I must protest against this hasty legislation. It looks to me like a fluke. There was no reason why this should not have been brought up two months ago.

Ald. Winnett said that when the temperance people worked for the reduction of the number of licenses in the city they were not underhand sands of weak, suffering women into healthy, happy, robust wives. It is for sale by all good medicine dealers.

Aid. Hunt said that in reality they were not adding to the number licenses in the city. Ald. O'Meara said he would vote to cut off every hotel in the city, but he thought an injustice had been done.

Ald. Stevely wanted the matter laid over. The division on the final reading was a tie, as follows: Yeas—Ald. Taylor, McPhillips, Belton, Douglass, Jolly, Carrothers, Dreaney-9. s. Stevely, Hunt and 9. Nays—Ald. O'Meara, Graham, Cooper, Wilkey, Nutkins, Gerry, McCallum and Greenlees-9.

The mayor decided in favor of the increase, on the ground that it was a matter of justice for the West London hotelkeepers to have a license. NOTICES OF MOTION.

Ald. Greenlees gave notice of motion to grant permission to No. 2 committee to introduce a bylaw to regulate the riding of bicycles in the city. Ald. McPhillips spoke of certain fines which had been imposed by the police court magistrate some time ago, and paid to the Ontario Government. It was also the opinion of the city soicitor, he said that the fines had been iliegally paid to the government, as he had advised that the better way would be to petition the governor-in-council, he (Ald. McPhillips) made that as a motion, and withdrew his motion to take legal proceedings. Ald. Gerry gave notice of motion to repair the cove bridge.

THE HOSE AGAIN.

Ald. Taylor put in a notice of motion to reconsider the purchase of 1,000 feet of Maple Leaf hose for the fire department. His object was to prevent payment of the account until an investigation.

Ald. McPhillips urged that the matter of an investigation be referred in deal of humbug, he believed, about de- the ordinary way, to come before the Ald. Taylor thought they might instruct the city solicitor to examine all witnesses in the matter under oath.
