

WANTS TO LIVE TO FORGIVE GIRL WED TO ANOTHER

Former Detroit Policeman, Near Death, Loyal To Woman He Loved.

SOBS IN MOTHER'S ARMS

Attempted Self-Destruction
On Lonely Grand Trunk Station Platform.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 25.—Lying in High Park General Hospital near death as a result of a bullet wound self-inflicted in a dark, deserted suburban depot, Carl Bates, former Highland Park patrolman, whose disappearance and frenzied threats to die for love set police of two states on his trail, sobbed to his mother tonight the story of his acts of last week.

In intense pain from a wound an inch above his heart, Bates, clutching his mother's hand, gasped that he wanted to live and to make good. In the same breath he asked her to forgive the girl whose deceit, he said, had prompted his attempt at self-destruction.

Occasionally he lapsed into a semi-coma and called aloud, "Margaret, come back to me!" He asked his mother to wire Margaret Tool in Wilkesbarre, Pa., and ask her to come to his bedside.

Find Farewell Letters.
In his pockets when he was borne into the hospital were two farewell letters, addressed to his mother and to the Tool girl, the first professing undying love for the girl, the second asking pitifully why she had treated him as she did.

Five days after Bates abandoned his automobile on the Belle Isle bridge approach, leaving behind notes announcing his intention of hurling himself into the Detroit River, he summoned courage for his attempt at suicide.

On the lonely platform of the Royal Oak Station of the Grand Trunk, Bates resumed his role of scorned Romeo in the public eye, when he turned a revolver on himself and fired once, the bullet piercing his breast, and lodging in his back after taking a downward course.

"I Want To Die."
"I want to die," he moaned at that time.

"I want to live," he sobbed to-night.

"I found that she was married to a man in Wilkesbarre," he told his mother. "I was stunned. I saw her kiss him as he left her on the steps of her home, and it broke my heart."

Behind the story of the boy's frustrated suit for the girl's hand his parents believe is a plot to bleed him of his possessions, in which the girl and the man, who, it now develops, is her husband, were conspirators.

"Some time ago," Bates said to his mother at the hospital, "I opened a note addressed to Margaret when we were living together in Glendale avenue. It was from Wilkesbarre, from this man Kane, and it said 'Bled Bates and come back to me as soon as you can.'"

Explained Away Note.

"She explained it away. We were happy. Then when she left Wednesday morning I decided to kill myself. I found a note to me that said: 'Bill, you've always treated me white. Don't feel so badly,' and it was signed 'Marge.'"

"I went to the station and found she was gone and I decided to go, too. As soon as I got off the train in Wilkesbarre I saw them together on the street."

GUELPH HOTEL BURNED.

GUELPH, Oct. 25.—The old Station Hotel at the head of Main street here was burned to the ground late yesterday. In addition to the hotel several outbuildings were destroyed. The hotel was owned by M. P. Barry. The cause of the fire is unknown.

'Unknown Warrior' Conflict May Delay Arms Parley a Day

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—There was still doubt tonight as to whether it would be possible for the first formal session of the forthcoming conference on limitation of armaments and disarmament of Pacific and Far Eastern questions to be held as planned, on Armistice Day, November 11.

CLAIMS SCHOOL TAX SITUATION IS INTOLERABLE

Bishop Fallon Declares Ontario Denies Catholics Educational Equality.

WANT OWN HIGH SCHOOLS

Ask Only Same Minority
Rights That Protestants
Enjoy in Quebec.

"The present position of the separate schools in Ontario is intolerable and cannot go on. If our case is not good let the court decide, but let something be done quick," was the declaration of Bishop M. F. Fallon, in addressing a meeting of delegates representing the Catholic Women's League of the London Diocese in St. Peter's Catholic Club last night. The bishop had a large audience. Besides the delegates from the 64 parishes of the diocese, there was also a large attendance of Catholic men and women of the city.

"Catholic Education" was the bishop's theme, and it was after presenting the case of the separate schools of the province that he made the above declaration. The address was a review of the position of separate schools since 1841.

Claims Marked Difference.
Catholic education, he said, did not differ from any other education as education, but it did as to being Catholic. The latter he described as the atmosphere, surroundings, text books and Catholic teachers. This was the marked difference from any other education.

"Separate schools," he contended, were the most discussed topic at the conference, and the discussions which led up to Confederation. He remarked that undoubtedly the majority of his hearers had in mind that separate schools were designed to satisfy the Catholics of Ontario. Nothing was farther from the fact. It was designed to protect the Protestant minority in Quebec, and said the bishop, "I don't blame them."

He would not trust the education of his people to a majority that was not of the same belief. And so the Catholic majority in Quebec, harkening to the demand of the Protestant majority in Ontario, that the Protestant minority in Quebec be protected, insisted on the same treatment for the Catholic minority in Ontario.

The bishop said that it had often been thrown in his face that he was not a good, loyal Canadian, because he was a Catholic. "I cannot accept this," he declared, "and added that if the Queen's minority in Ontario was not as loyal as the Queen's minority in Quebec at the time of confederation he would begin to think that there was something inferior in being a Catholic."

Catholics in Politics.
The bishop touched briefly on the enormous agitation in Ontario against separate schools, as carried on by George Brown and his paper, the Globe, and how it drove every Catholic in the province into the ranks of the Conservative party. And then he said: "They say that Catholics are in politics. Why, George Brown drove us into them, and Sir John A. Macdonald kept us in politics." The bishop also said that from reading the old archives at Ottawa he would quote from George Brown and Sir John A. Macdonald that "it was not a safe thing to monkey with the Roman Catholic machine."

After confederation, the bishop said, Mr. Brown and Egerton Ryerson, who was the superintendent of schools, said that their opposition to separate schools was that they feared the danger to the national school system. But the contrary has been the fact. The separate schools have kept the public schools "up to snuff," and the separate schools had benefited also. "Competition in the life of trade, even in education," said the bishop.

Two Systems Defined.
By the B. N. act he said two systems of schools were defined—the general

Toronto Police Need Permits To Attend Theatre or Movies

TORONTO, Oct. 25.—"The green book"—the new rules and regulations for the direction of the Toronto police, as revised and amended by Chief of Police Dickson—was sent out from police headquarters today to all ranks.

"The rules and regulations as they were are practically obsolete," the chief stated. The new book replaces the red book which was drawn up thirty-one years ago.

In instructions to patrol sergeants the book states: "Constables shall not enter public houses or houses of entertainment, nor permit their constables to do so, except in the actual execution of duty, or to make observations or investigation in the line of duty."

"They must not permit undue familiarity on the part of constables doing duty under them."

Pertaining to constables the book says: "Constables are not to attend theatres, racetracks, or other places of amusement, even in plain clothes, without obtaining leave to do so."

"Constables neglecting to avail themselves of the time at their disposal for rest and sleep, and spending a large portion of their time in walking about the streets, are to be reported to the police to interfere with the commissioners or chief constable with respect to transfer or other duties, will be considered guilty of disobedience of orders."

"Matrons," says the book, "must when on duty, be neatly and respectably dressed in modest attire."

Any members of the force found entering public houses, except on duty, or frequenting shops where spirits are sold, or drinking there, or who purchase spirits from unlicensed persons, are liable to dismissal. "Any constable may be removed from service by dismissal or otherwise without assigning any reason."

common and the separate common schools. The only difference made in the two was the first word. He referred at length to the comparison of the rights of the two provinces, Ontario and Quebec, as defined in the act. He outlined the case that had been taken to see that both acts were identical, and he added, "they are identical in wording and meaning." The act he declared to be a treaty, "no mere piece of legislation," and then proceeded to tell how it was being interpreted in Quebec first and then Ontario.

In Quebec the situation, as he outlined it, might be briefly said to be that the Protestant minority has complete charges of its own schools from the alphabet 'A' up and even has its own deputy minister of education.

In Ontario they did not ask that much. He did not think that he would ever live to see a Catholic minister of education in Ontario. He had seen a minister in that post, but he never expected and did not think that the youngest child within his hearing would ever see a priest in that post. And so he proceeded to the Ontario position.

"A Grudging Spirit."
"It was a grudging spirit towards the separate schools from the beginning," he declared. "I remember when the separate school taxes had to be collected at the doors of the church. It was only after a great deal of insistence and beseeching that we got the right to collect our own taxes, as had our Protestant fellow citizens for their public schools. We were allowed in a sort of back-handed way to develop our own schools."

The bishop traced a great deal of this trouble to the "cezar of the school system of the province," the then superintendent of education, who said that he did "not believe in separate schools," and that they "should be put out of existence."

The bishop said that the bishops of the province have, however, labored steadily, with a quiet, courteous demand for consideration right up to the present without success. He exonerated the present Government from his condemnation, saying that they have been the heirs of the educational system of their predecessors, but, he said, it was their duty to study them and then deal in strict justice with the situation.

The bishop concluded his address with a few words on the assessment question as it relates to separate schools, pointing out that no matter what proportion of the stockholders of a corporation, utility of stock company may be Catholic, the separate schools are deprived of any share of the taxes.

Calls Situation Intolerable.
The situation, he declared, to be positively incredible and intolerable. "It has got to be defined one way or another. We have got to be told plainly and frankly that we don't cut the same figure as the people of other faiths and that we get our rights."

Bishop Fallon said that he was sure that when his non-Catholic friends understood the situation, they would immediately realize and admit the fairness of the case for separate schools. He announced that he is issuing a series of pamphlets dealing with the situation.

FAIR LIBERALS LINE UP FORCES FOR CAMPAIGN

Leading Supporters of Mr.
Somerville Reorganize Women's Liberal Association.

URGE NEW REGISTRATION

Will Open Information Bureau
This Week in Hyman
Hall.

With the reorganization Wednesday of the London Women's Liberal Association, an important step was taken by leading women supporters of Mr. C. R. Somerville and Liberal principles in forwarding their plans for participation in the election campaign, and bringing to the attention of women electors their national responsibility in exercising the franchise on election day.

The organization meeting followed a luncheon given by Mrs. C. R. Somerville, wife of the Liberal candidate, at the Hunt Club, to afford former members of the Liberal Women's executive and other active workers in the cause of Liberalism an opportunity of meeting and conferring with Mrs. Harry Carpenter of Hamilton, president of the Ontario Women's Liberal Association.

Mrs. Vining President.
Mrs. C. R. and Mrs. C. R. Somerville were made honorary presidents. Mrs. Vining was the unanimous choice for president. Mrs. Donald McLean and Mrs. W. H. Fox were elected first and second vice-presidents; Mrs. T. H. Purdon, treasurer; Mrs. E. J. Perkins, recording secretary, and Miss C. McIntosh, corresponding secretary. Miss Jessie Macle is chairman for ward 1; Mrs. Alex. Calder, ward 2; Mrs. C. A. Whitman, ward 4.

One of the first activities of the organization will be to bring to the attention of every woman in London eligible to vote, regardless of party affiliation, the importance of making sure that her name is on the voters list during registration week.

A women's information bureau will be opened immediately in the large sitting-room in the southwest corner of Hyman Hall, the rendezvous of patriotic women workers and the Red Cross headquarters throughout the war. Direct access to the bureau may be obtained through the Queen's avenue entrance, marked, in the course of a few days, by a large banner. Women conveners will be in charge to elucidate points with regard to registration and later concerning polling places, the procedure of voting, etc., as well as to give information regarding the issues of the campaign.

Must Educate.
Mrs. Carpenter, whose stirring informal talk to the group of Liberal women, was in a large measure responsible for the decision to reorganize without delay, emphasized the importance of awakening women to their duty of voting now that they have the ballot, and thus rendering peace-time service as faithfully as they rendered war-time service.

The value of the association at all times as a means of education in public questions was urged as vital as the functions to be exercised during an election campaign to promote the cause supported.

Mrs. Carpenter, who returned to Hamilton last evening, has consented to come back to London next week for the first rally meeting of women supporters of Mr. Somerville to be held next week by the reorganized London Women's Liberal Association.

WINDSOR, Oct. 25.—The girl mother who abandoned her twin babies of a few days old on top deck of Detroit ferry, Sept. 15, is alleged to have notified the authorities that she is willing to disclose the identity of the father of her infants if she is granted immunity from the law.

This information was conveyed to M. R. Winters, Inspector of Children's Aid Society, in a letter received by him today supposedly from the mother, who signs "Jessie" to communication. "If you are willing to guarantee me protection from prosecution," the writer says, "I will take my babies back and disclose the identity of the father. I am sorry that I left them. There seemed no other course open for me. I was betrayed by a Windsor man, who induced me to get rid of them."

The writer of the letter also asks the Inspector to meet her in Detroit if he is willing to accede to her request. This Inspector Winters is reported to have decided to do.

OPENS CAMPAIGN IN MARITIMES AT WOODSTOCK, N.B.

Crerar Recalls Mr. Guthrie's
Change of Front On Re-ciprociti Since 1911.

LAUDS WESTERN LOYALTY

Points To War Record of Prairie Provinces in Reply To Meighen.

WOODSTOCK, N. B., Oct. 25.—(By Canadian Press Staff Correspondent.)—Opening the National Progressives party's campaign in the Maritime Provinces here today, Hon. T. A. Crerar came sharply to the defence of the West. He declared that an "imputation" had been cast again at the loyalty of the men in Western Canada, and in warm tones resented statements reported to have been made by the prime minister and by Hon. Hugh Guthrie, minister of militia and defence.

Today's meeting was but the second which Mr. Crerar has addressed in New Brunswick since he entered political life, and singularly enough the first was from the same platform. The audience was not so large as some of the Ontario meetings, and like other agrarian audiences, generally was un-demonstrative.

There was one interruption. Mr. Crerar was referring to Mr. Guthrie, claiming that while Mr. Guthrie attacked reciprocity now, he supported it in 1911.

"Yes," interposed a voice, "he spoke in favor of it from that very platform."

"Well, the whirligig of politics brings many changes," musingly observed Mr. Crerar, "and it has brought some queer ones for Mr. Guthrie." In his defence of the Progressive movement, Mr. Crerar cited the following statement, reported to have been made by the prime minister during his tour of the Maritime Provinces:

"It is not unfair for me to say," Mr. Meighen was quoted, "that the soil from which the Wood-Crerar movement has grown is not so wholly Canadian soil as the soil in which you and I grew. There has been much immigration in that country, and though these immigrants make good farmers, I do not believe that they have the vision of Canada or the heart of Canada in the way the rest of us have."

Regrets Premier's Words.

"As a Canadian who was born in the same province as Mr. Meighen," commented Mr. Crerar, "our birth-places were no more than a day's journey apart—as a Canadian proud of his country, I regret to hear such language falling from the lips of the prime minister of Canada. There is in it an imputation against the men in Western Canada. I care nothing for Mr. Meighen describing the party to which I belong as the Wood-Crerar party. That is a transparent device to create prejudice in the public mind against a political movement that is threatening the foundations of this Government."

"But in face of the fact that we need people in Canada to share our burdens, to develop our resources, in face of the fact that Western Canada and Alberta and Saskatchewan particularly, sent more men to the front in proportion to their population than almost any other province, I say that I regret to see the prime minister using such language."

No Question of Loyalty.
"There is no question of the loyalty of Western Canada, none whatever," Mr. Crerar added. But such questions were raised, he claimed, to divert public attention from the main issues—such issues as the railways, public debt, immigration and the unification of Canada."

He declared that no man in his right senses would advocate that the tariff be swept away at once, but argued that the budget of last session, instead of decreasing, had increased tariff protection.

WIRTH TO AGAIN STRIVE TO FORM GERMAN CABINET

Will Attempt To End Chaos in Republic in Response To Ebert's Appeal.

PLANS MAKESHIFT BODY

Entente's Ultimatum Regarding Silesia Necessitates Hurried Organization.

BERLIN, Oct. 25.—Joseph Wirth, who resigned from the office of German chancellor last Saturday, has been designated by President Ebert to form a new cabinet.

He has consented to assume the task. It was in an eleventh-hour attempt to solve the political chaos brought about by the Wirth cabinet's retirement on Saturday that President Ebert tonight requested Dr. Wirth to form a so-called businessmen's or non-partisan ministry. It is expected that the new government will take office tomorrow.

The cabinet will not be a coalition one, as all efforts to reconstitute the three-party block or to induce the German People's Party to enter the Government failed definitely when the Democrats and the representatives of the People's Party withdrew from today's inter-party conference, owing to a dispute over the Upper Silesian decision.

The Majority Socialists and the Clerical Party will constitute the nucleus of the parliamentary support actually vouchsafed the new ministry. The Democrats and the Independent Socialists promise to stand by it, while the German People's Party again agrees to observe benevolent neutrality. Notwithstanding the precarious nature of the support afforded him by the inter-party "gentleman's agreement," Dr. Wirth sallied forth tonight in quest of men to do the government bench when the Reichstag meets at noon tomorrow.

The new cabinet, it is considered, will be wholly an emergency makeshift which will undergo changes a few weeks hence. Its organization under pressure is due solely to the Government's predicament with respect to the entente's ultimatum in connection with the appointment of commissioners for negotiation with the Poles.

The entire west coast of Florida is feeling the effects of the storm and is virtually isolated in so far as communication is concerned.
