WORK IN WINNIPEG.

(From the Manitoba Free Press, Feb. 22.) A working man was asked by a Free Press reporter yesterday as to the whereabouts of the thousand carpenters said by a correspondent of the Toronto World to be out of employment in Winnipeg at the present time. "I cannot tell," was the reply. "I think we want about a thousand more." Another report intended to be present time. I cannot ten, was the viply. "I think we want about a thousand more." Another report, intended to be awfully damaging to this city, is to the effect that some fifteen bricklayers had returned to Toronto, thinking that their prospects for getting work there were better than here. The item about the bricklayers may be in accordance with the facts. Brick-laying is not practiced very extensively here in the winter, and it would be difficult for a bricklayer to get anything to do in his particular line just now. As to the thousand carpenters, after pondering the matter over, the reporter has come to the conclusion that the writer of the paragraph in the World was drunk one Sunday, and that, staggering along Main street, he saw a crowd of people coming out of church. As places of worship here are surrounded with scaffolding, pries of lumber and other things associated with carpenter work, it was naturally at the befored intellect of ing, piles of lumber and other things associated with carpenter work, it was naturally suggested to the befogged intellect of the inebriated correspondent that the men whom he saw in such large numbers amid such surroundings must be carpenters seeking employment. Having thus found a good item he hastened to write. Perhaps the World, which so industriously circulated the other item will also print this.

The World simply published the letter and credited to the Toronto Telegram, where it first appeared.

ST. JAMES' CATHEDRAL.

Last night Rev. Mr. Rainsford preached from Mathew xi, 25th verse, and the course of his remarks said. "Come unto me" was the universal claim of christianity It was the claim of Christ. But christianity was outnumbered by budhism; moedism outdone christianity in the rapidity of its growth. Budhism numbered four millions, while christianity had only two millions. But whilst budhism and mohammedism were only suited to certain classes and places christianity was suited to all places and was adapted for all classes, and suited all sorts and conditions of men. He would not dwell on the fact that christianity had at its head the owner of the universe but on the call "Come christianity had at its head the owner of the universe, but on the call "Come unto me and I will give you rest."

He then pointed out the nature of this rest, and who they were that were called thereto, and lamented the slow progress made by christianity and the wide spread tendency to infidelity and socialism, the cause of which he laid at the door of the christain church. Some sneered at Paine and Voltaire, but these men did a good christain church. Some sneered at Paine and Voltaire, but these men did a good work for the cause of christianity. They did a great work in their day. They unmasked the hypocracy of the christian church, which was diverting the people from the truth of the gospel and a christianity, and turned men away from christianity to become infidels. That terrible French revolution was the result of the christian church failing to do its day.

church failing to do its duty. The christian church was to blame for the plots and schemes of communism. Communism, so cialism and fraternities were only charicacialism and fraternities were only charica-tures of christianity, and in their way were proclaiming the gospel, and these men were taught to see the image of God which the church had failed to develope. What was the reason that there was so many empty seats before him when they were free to all. The statistics given the other day were too favorable. Whilst he was then speaking thousands were out walking the speaking thousands were out walking the public streets sowing for themselves the seeds of destructson. He would not speak plainer. What they wanted was a missionary spirit for home work in which young and old should engage. He prayed that God would save them from the terrible fate that awaited France—God save them

But alas when death comes suddenly upon him, like a thief in the night, in an hour when he least expects it, then he will hour when he least expects it, then he will see the folly of his course and on what a slippery path he has been treading. The speaker then called attention to this day of Christ. Isaiah with the greatest accuracy had prophecied this day and the minutest circumstances relative to the coming of Christ 700 years beforehand, and is this not sufficient proof of His divinity? This day has no night, it becan with the is this not sufficient proof of His divinity? This day has no night, it began with the early dawn of morn, it began when the voice of Christ was heard saying, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy ladened and I will give you rest." It is this same day yet; the dawn has not yet fallen; right through the sweeping ages of time it was God's day. But though man has fallen from his high estate—though through sin's contamination he has lost his happiness, yet the moral law is full of mercy for the repentent sinner, and he has yet hope of legaining his happiness.
