One of the curiosities of Brazil is a tree whose wood and bark contain so much silica that they are used by potters. Both wood and bark are burned in equal proportions with clay, producing a very superior ware. The tree grows to a heighth of 100 feet, but does in equal proportions with clay, produc-ing a very superior ware. The tree grows to a heighth of 100 feet, but does not exceed a foot in diameter. A French statistician says that the number of men and women in France is more nearly equal than in any other country of the world, there being only 1,007 women to 1,000 men. In Switzerland there are 1,064 men to 1,000 women, and in Greece only 983. The conditions in Hong Kong, according to this authority, are "appalling," there being only 366 women to 1,000 men.

There is now in course of erection at the Altoona, Pa., shops a new passenger locomotive which is expected to cover 100 miles an hour without any trouble. The wheels are larger in diameter than the ordinary engine, and will be equipped with ball bearings like a bicycle. It will also have a steam pressure of but ninety pounds, against 180 pounds pressure in the locomotive now in use.

One of the most curious customs of Siam is that each year is named after an animal, and only certain animals are allowed to intermarry. A person born in the year of the elephant, for instance, cannot marry a person born in the year of the tiger; neither may the lion mast with the lamb. The law imposes dire penalties upon all who give false ages, or who represent that they are gay gazelles when, in fact, they are mischievous monkeys, and therefore it is a law which would not be welcome in western lands.

Coal is made up of the remains of trees and plants which grew on the earth before man or any other mammal had appeared. Changed by pressure, heat and dampness, this mass of vegetable matter has become a kind of carbon, mixed with bitumen, or the tarry substances which are always made by slow decay of such matter. Anthracite or stone coal, sometimes called glance coal on account of its shine, has the least bitumen in it: bituminous coal has in it bitumen in it: bituminous coal has in it much more bitumen than anthracite, and cannel coal contains more bitumen than either of these.

An old German, who recently came to this country from the fatherland, has begun a novel industry in a little shanty in Pegg street, Philadelphia. This is nothing more never less than the in Pegg street, Philadelphia. This is nothing more nor less than the manufacture of "chestnut flour." The flour manufactured from dried chestnuts has for many years been in great demand in Germany. A delicious sort of sweet bread is made from it by those who are familiar with the old-fashioned method of preparing the dough. The product of the old German's establishment is very much sought after by the Germans in the neighborhood, and the supply is far below the demand.

Ostrich Farm.

There was a terribly earnest fight at the Coronado ostrich farm across the bay from San Diego, Cal., recently, between two of the largest and ugliest cock ostriches in the flock of 30 or 40 birds. The fighters weighed about 300 pounds each. They were evenly matched and very plucky, and did their best to kill each other.

There is novelty about an ostrich fight. The ponderous birds are quick as cats. They use their feet more dexterously than a pugilist uses his fist and with far more deadly effect. One of these birds can thrust his bony, pointed toe through an inch board with very slight effort. Such a blow is enough to kill an ox. With a single kick one of these ostriches would disembowel a man instantly.

The fight started over the division of cabbage leaves which Keeper Campbell had thrown to the hungry birds. Seldom have two bipeds fought with more desire to kill than did these ostriches. And a royal fight it was in the eyes of the keeper as he saw plumes worth $10 each, soar from the body of a bird in response to the kick of the enemy and fall crumpled and worthless into the dust.

Feathers don't count for much in the flashing eyes of the ostriches.

Our opinion on corn is unchanged, for the present. Wheat has attracted more attention so that the speculative interest is very light. Through freights to the east will be advanced on Monday, Nov. 12, to 25c per hundred weight. This itself will have some influence to depress it. The cash demand is good. G. W. YARKER.

The provision market was controlled to-day by wheat sympathy with strength in that market bringing in buying orders, both local and outside, and overcoming the influence of liberal selling by manufacturers and local operators. This influence was strongest during the last hour, when the selling seemed to be exhausted, and the closing was strong at the top prices. We feel bearish on provisions on the legitimate situation, but speculative interest may be awakened by the aptum in wheat and this may carry the market higher on this turn.
