HERE AND THERE IN EUROPE.

I.

STREET IN VIENNA.

"In Vienna," says a graphic tourist, "the great sight is the city itself—a scene of busy life hardly to be surpassed in London or Paris. The general plan of the city is peculiar. The central part is surrounded by a series of broad, open spaces, or rings, often planted with trees, like the Parisian boulevards, but wider. They take the place of the ancient ramparts, and are lined in
