A False Story.

To the Blitur of the Catholic Regiser.
Sit-A copy of the Camadian (Murchman of July 18, was brought to my notice. Annong several artioles which either show a sad want of knowledge in the writors, or look for amazing credulity in the readers, is "The Story of the Church of Eng. land," an historical sketch, which for incousistency and garbled faets, might easily expect a prizo, if sent to the World's Fair. In it is the following statement ;-" In A.D. 1066, William invaded England, and having ganed a signal vittory. . $\because$ was crowned King of England. The Pope at once urged the Conqueror to pay homage to the Church of Rome. His reply to the Pope's ambassador is historical : Homage to thee I have not chosen, nor do I choose to do. I never made a promise to that effect; neither do I find that it was ever performed by my prodecessors to thine;" an answer that shows up to the time of the Norman invasion, the Pope had no jurnsdiction uver the Church or Crown of Eugland. An important fact," \&e.
It is a little stranga to read a few lines after, that this same William the Conqueror favoured foreign prelates who " greatly assisted the efforts of Rome to bring the Church under its control." If, as the Churchman very illogically assumes from the worde of the bing-that he considered the Church of England independent of the Holy See-why did he, so jealous of his Crown, receive these foreign prelates or assist them to bring the Church in England under subjection to the Church of Rome? Consistency has little share in Anglicanism.
There is nothing more insidious and dangerous than a lie which is not all a lie. Such is the statement quoted from the Churchman. To gtate the whole truth is its best answer. In the first place it was not at once, but A.D. 1079-thirteen $y /$ ars after the Conquest- that William made use of these words. They were not said to the ambassador, but written in a letter to Gregory VII. They had no relation to the jurisdiction of the Pope over the Church in England, but referred to the temporal sovereiguity of the Pope, which Whlliam had promised to his predecessor, Alexander II., before invading England. William, anxious to have the good will of the Pope in his claim to the Crown of England, wrote to the Holy Father, and according to the Chroniclers of the time stated that "if God would favor him to conquer his right to the Crown, be would hold the Kingdom of England from God and the Holy Father as His Vicar, and from none else! It was when, among other things, the King was reminded of this promise by the Papal Legate, that be wrote to the Pope, denying his promise and refasing to swear fealty. In the same letter from which the Chutrcimanh has taken its historical words, mention is made of a castom which the Church of England, by law established, does not follow, jet which dates from early Saxon dajs, and the right of which William acknowledged in this very letter, the custom of sending Peter's pence to Rome.
There is another histurical fact which shows the insincerity and duplicity of the Conqueror. Ha wished to secure undisputed possession of the Throne of England. When he wrote to the Pope, promising jealty, he was also making the same promise to philip I. of France. His words bear a great resemblance to the words written to the Pope: "You are my sovereign. If it pleases you to aid me, and God grants me the favor of obtaining my rights over England, I promise to do bonor to you as if I held it from you." William, a Farrior from his youth, ambitious of power, was more liberal in making promises, than in fulfilling them.

The sanctity of a promise and even of an oath was not always respeoted by the Kings of England. When William was asked by the King of France to do homage for the Kingdom of England, he refused. His refusal is peculiar in the reason it gives: England was already under the suzerainty of the Pope, and he could not aoknowledge a second. This is the homage that William asid he never promizod, and his predecessors never performed. This is the truth of the important fact which, according to the Churchman, proves the Pope had no jurisdiction over the Church of England. William the Conqueror never thought of denying the spiritual supremacy of the Pope. In his coronation oath and during the whole course of his reign, he acknowledged it.
Another 1eferenoe to the Churchman, and I have done, speaking of this same reign, the writor says: "The Arohbishop of Canterbury, being then as now Primate of all England, and having no ecolosiastical suporior." The Arclabishop of Canterbury at that time was the illustrious Lanfranc. re nowned for his piety and learning throughout Europe. He became Archbishop A.D. 1070 ; and, following the custom of the Archbishops since the days of Augustine and Gregory the Great, he went to Rome within the first year of his consecration to recelve from the hands of the successor of St. Puter the pallium, the symbol of Metropolitan jurisdiction. In his journey to Rome he was accompanied by a magnificent escors, specially sent by William. It was during this visit the Pope gave his sanction to the Archbishop's Primscy over the Episconacy of England. Consequently, two years afterwards, when a council was held at Londoc, the Primacy of the see of Canterbury, which had been previously disputed by the Archbishop of York, was solemnly proclaimed.
Anglicans are so anxious to claim continuity for their Church with the Catholic Church in England before the Reformation, that illogical con clusions from half-stated facts become for them arguments stroug as faith. It indeed requires Anglican spectacles to see the resemblance between the Charch of England to-day and the Church of England of the days of Ncrman Kings, and only Anglicans can see it.
