The Women's Participation in Election Project contributes to improving women's participation and representation at the national and local levels through an inclusive and representative electoral environment. The International Republican Institute implemented this project.

In 2016-2017, over 2,000 mostly female potential candidates and campaign managers took part in 46 elections training workshops. The workshops were run by the International Republican Institute's Campaign Academy for Successful Elections. Workshop participants hailed from nine political parties and came from across the country to participate. In Mongolia's 2016 elections, 13 women were elected to the State Great Hural (parliament). This put female representation at a record high of 17.1%.

The Strengthening Democratic Participation and Transparency in the Public Sector Project promotes more effective, accountable and transparent management of public services and resources. The Asia Foundation implemented this project. In 2016-2017, the project helped build public sector capacity for good governance by giving public sector institutions technical assistance to develop and implement key anti-corruption strategies and action plans. This included Mongolia's National Anti-Corruption Strategy, passed on November 30, 2016.

The project also conducted the 2016 Survey on Perceptions and Knowledge of Corruption and made the survey's findings public. The 2016 survey, which placed a strong emphasis on capturing women's perspectives, explored the gendered aspects of corruption in its effects on men and women.
