Thus ended one of the longest trials

The homicide and bank robbery for which John Krafchenko stood his trial which John Krafchenko stood December at Morden, Man., occurred December 3 last in the little town of Plum Coulee, about 65 miles southwest of Win-

Shortly before noon on that day a man disguised with black false whiskers and moustache was seen on the streets of the town. He was wearing a black cap and had the collar of his long black overcoat turned up around his ears. About 12.30 (noon) when the two bank clerks had gone to lunch the bandit entered the Bank of Montreal and held up Manager H. M. Ar-nold, who was alone. The manager was forced to hand over 54,000 bills and currency.

The bandit then rushed out of the bank with the money in his arms, and was pursued by the manager. When the rear of the bank had been reached bandit turned and fired from a distance of a few feet, and the bank manager fell, shot thru the left breast. He died almost immediately.

Krafchenko then leaped into a wait ing automobile in charge of William Dyck, a local liveryman, who said the dit threatened him with a revolve and compelled him to take him to a point 30 miles from Winnipeg. Is Allegorical and Yet Grimly Real - A Drama of The annual dance and at-home of the Trenton Old Boys' Association of Toronto will be held on Friday, 17th inst. at the Metropolitan. All ex-residents of Trenton are invited. Transformations.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson appeared at the Royal Alexandra Theatre last night in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," the most-talked-of play of the season, when he first appeared in it five years ago. It is a strange play, fanciful, allegorical, yet grimly real, and all made wonderful by the intense personality of the lodger in the Mr. and Mrs. Harry R. real, and all made wonderful by the intense personality of the lodger in the third floor back.

Into the sordid, petty meanness of the boardinghouse, the Passerby brings his magnetism, and by his face, his magnetism, and by his face, his his magnetism, and by his face, his manner, his words awakens in each disappointed heart a desire for the better thing, the forgotten ideal, the pushed-back life. Just his belief in each one, just his divine power to see the hidden, brings to each one a realization of the old, better self. The play is divided into epilog, play and prolog, so that one follows the transformation of the cheat into Mrs. Sharpe, landlady, and finally into the lady of the house; of a rogue into Jack Samuels, of doubtful mining interests, and finally into a Jew, an honorable gentleman, a power of a bully drew's Gardens, are spending Easter week in Atlantic City, Philadelphia, Washington and New York. The wedding of the daughter of an old resident of Toronto took place in North Vancouver, B.C., on Tuesday, March 31, when Gerdine Tryphena, daughter of Benjamin Hardie, late of Deer Park, was united in marriage to James W. faith.

Of the splendid work of the entire company little need be said, but Augusta Haviland, as the landlady; Frank Lacy, Ian Robertson and Athol Forde as Jake Samuels, Major Tompkins and Joey Wright, respectively, istand out prominently in the excellence of their work. Gertrude Elliott as the slavey, Stasia, does a bit of work that is a revelation even in this versatile is a revelation even in this versatile actress, and so strong an impression does the play leave that one finds oneself saying reverently with her, "sometimes we can't make head or tails of life, and yet it's all beautiful."

In fact, the great feature of the work done by the actors was the entire absence of egotism and the splendid harmony and measured dignity of the entire performance.
