Stewart's Discretion.

In summing up the evidence, Coroner N.

Constable Boyd, who refused to hold up his hands, showed courage, but his action was not good ractics. The shooting was not a case of manslaughter, but murder, perpetrated by Fred Lee Rice. The coroner declared that Rutledge was undoubtedly a party to the crime, as was also the man who supplied the revolvers to the prisoners. Credit was also due to Motorman Kohlmeyer and others who assisted the officers of the law in preventing the escape, while some, said the coroner, showed prudence conducive to long life.
