A HUMOROUS INCIDENT FROM THE FRONT LINE

Many unusual incidents, humorous and otherwise, have been related about soldiers while on active service at the front, but a recent letter from a well known Toronto signaller brings to light one of the most amusing of the war. After a portion of the Canadian line had been subjected to an exceptionally heavy bombardment by the Hun batteries, a considerable stretch of signal cable had to be relaid as it had been torn up by falling shells, and as the cable had to go thru a tunnel forty ft.

long it was a very hazardous undertaking. Volunteers were called for and Lance-Corpl. L., and his chum "Lena" offered to relay the destroyed wire, and departed heavily laden with cable. On their arrival at the mouth of the tunnel, which was just large enough to admit the passage of a human body it was decided that "Lena" should go thru the tunnel and drag the cable after him while Lance-Corpl. L. would pay it out to him. This plan was carried out, and "Lena," with the end attached to his body, disappeared under the earth. Minutes passed, and no sign came from "Lena" to prove that he had made a successful trip thru the bowels of the earth, until Lance-Corpl. L., in order to wake his chum up, started to throw stones in an effort to get some response from the other end. Fifteen minutes passed, and still no sign. Twenty minutes passed, and still no move, and so L., thinking that something had happened his chum entered the tunnel in search of him. Gasping for breath after his perilous trip thru the narrow passageway, L. looked about him, the cable was there intact, but no sign of "Lena." With his heart in his mouth he started to look for the body of his chum (for that was all he expected to find) when he was seized from behind and dragged into a deserted dugout and the voice of "Lena" shouting in his ears came in here you -- ass, there's "shrapnel" falling all around the place. Up to the present no one has had the heart to tell little "Lena" that the "shrapnel" was the stones thrown over in order to wake him up. Such is life in the army.
