A Goldwyn feature introduced yesterday and continued today presents the stage beauty Jane Cowl in Basil King's Saturday Evening Post story "The spreading Dawn." This is not a trashy fiction by any means but a powerful heart-throbbing leve drama of the highest type, splendidly acted, charmingly photographed and containing very much that is artistic in its many-sided presentation. It has been a long time since a story of this type made so profound ar impression.

A Drew comedy, which as usual was polite and clean and the second of the Imperial's exclusive British government war pictures, completed a bill that people of taste could not help but enjoy. Tomorrow Vivian Martin in a sweet story of the out-of-doors entitled
