

ST. JULIEN; YPRES

(Montreal Gazette.)
The anniversary of the second battle of Ypres and that of St. Julien have been "remembered" by Canadians with fitting solemnity and appropriate pride. The part the Canadians played in these battles is well known to historians. There are many people to whom the word "Ypres" has a tragic meaning. It was in defence of that fragment of Belgium that a quarter of a million British soldiers laid down their lives. In this herculean struggle, Canadian troops played a gallant part, and those who returned remember "The Salient" as a place of the most difficult endurance, the most desperate courage, and the most terrible suffering. It is our duty, therefore, to recall that bloodshed and that agony so that our natural pride may be awakened. Neither the crest of the hill at Albuera, nor the slopes at Waterloo, saw greater deeds than those accomplished by the unconquerable—even if contemptible—British Army, which again and yet again throughout the pages of history has stemmed the tide of foreign conquest and which at Ypres kept evergreen the brilliant traditions of the Wellingtonian troops. The memory of Ypres comes whispering to Canadians very terrible but still precious things. What Verdun meant to France, Ypres means to Britons. But the fighting round Ypres was on a vaster scale than the grand assault on Verdun. Not one but three battles were fought in the Salient. The first was the climax of the race for the coast in the autumn of 1914, when the worn ranks of French's Expeditionary Force were called on to hold their lines against an overwhelming artillery fire and hordes of fresh troops. After the dreadful winter campaign in which adequate equipment and material were lacking to men who had to stand for many hours together almost up to their waists in bitterly cold water, came the first of the dastardly gas attacks.

In the Flanders offensive of 1917 the troops in the Salient achieved and suffered more than seemed possible to men. Not only British evidence but Hindenburg and Ludendorff also agree that all the conflicts of the war that Flanders' battle was one of the most gruesome to the men in the front lines. When a man is able to say "I was at Ypres," he need say no more. That is ample. It is fitting, therefore, that St. Julien Day should be recalled and honored. The service performed for posterity in that Ypres Salient deserves its memory perpetuated. At Ypres itself a roll of honor has been deposited, bearing the name of every soldier who fell in its defence. A hostel which will serve the needs of those who go to Ypres seeking some scrap of Belgian earth is being erected, and its walls will bear the names in divisions of those who fell in action. All honor to the glorious heroes of Ypres. Too often, it is said that the comradeship and good-will of the war will be forgotten. There can be no likelihood of that, because the old spirit of each for all, and all for each must be cherished through the quickening of the memories of common service and sacrifice. When can the glory of Ypres fade? Not while the memory of the noble defenders of it endures.

When you sat down to your soup last night, how many slices of bread did you eat with it?

One?
Try eating two.
Lots of people are only half as vital and well-nourished as they should be, because they are unconsciously cheating themselves by eating only half the bread they deserve. Double your daily bread-eating and you will also double your store of working-health and joy in living. Eat more bread.
There is no food equal to bread, in wholesomeness and nutriment. It is also very economical. You save money from the instant you start eating—
"Two Slices For One."
St. John and Fairville baked Bread is Bread at its Best—always pure, tempting and nutritious.
