turn, where they would be safe, as the devil could not swim; and presently they buckled to their oars again and the boat came alongside. The long man, watching his chance, sprang with great agility into the chains, and stepped on deck. I ran up to him and seized his hand with both mine.

"Sir," cried I, speaking with difficulty, so great was the tunult of my spirits and the joy and gratitude that swelled my heart, "I thank you a thousand times over for this visit. I am in the most helpless condition that can be imagined. I am not astonished that you should have been startled by the acceptance of this reveal and by the search seed of the notion fine, but could not conceive how I had, single handed, broken out the powder-barrels, got them over the side, and fixed them.

"Why," said I, "'twas slow, heavy work, of course; but a man who labours for his life will do marvelous things. It is like the jump of a hunted stag."

"True for you," says the captain. "A swim of two miles spends me in pleasurin'; but I've swum eight miles to save my life, and stranded fresh as a new-hooked cod. What's your intended that you should have been startled by the acceptance of this reveal and by the search per life and the properties of the properties. NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC!

They were a gooti deal puzzled when I told them of the mines I had made and sprung in the ice. They reckoned the notion fine, but could not conceive how I had, single handed, broken out the powder-barrels, got them over the side, and fixed them.

"True for you," says the captain. "A swim of two miles spends me in pleasurin'; but I've swum eight miles to save my life, and stranded fresh as a new-hooked cod. What's your intended to the provided them o that you should have been startled by the appearance of this vessel and by the appearance of this vessel and by he figure I make in these clothes, but, sir, you will be much more amazed when you have heard my story."

"Well, cook my gizzard," he exclaimed presently, through his nose, and after another good look at me and along the decks and up aloft, "if this ain't mi-raculous, tew. Durned if we didd's take this backer for some and the stroked down the hair upon his at lowest market rates.

"To sail the schooner home," said I, "if I can get help. She's too good to dandou. She'll fetch money in England."

"Ay, as a show."

"Yes, and as a coalman. Righer mondernly, and carry your forecastle deck into the head, captain, and she's a brave ship, fit for a Baltimore eye."

"Dip, captain, dip, my lads; there's enough of this to drown ye in the hold," said I, pointing to the bowl. "Come, this is a happy meeting for me; let it be a merry one. Captain, I drink to the Susın Tucker."

"Sir, your servant. Here's to your sweetheart, be she wife or maid. Bill, jump on deck and take a look round. See to the boat."

"How old be she?"

"How old be she?"

"It is to down the hair upon his chin.

One of the men went out.

"How old be she?" "She was cast away in seventeen hundred and fifty-three," said I.
"Well, I'm durned. She's froze hard, airree. I reckon she'll want a hot sun to thaw her. Split me, mister, if she ain't worth sailing home as a show-box."

I introduced the circulations by ask "She was cast away in seventeen

I interrupted his ejaculations by ask ing him to step below, where we could sit warm while I related my story, and sit warm while I related my story, and so will of that freight; there'll be ten times the value of your lay in your lay sit warm while I related my story, and I saked him to invite his boat's crew into the cabin that I might regale them with a bowl of such liquor as I ventured to say had never passed their lips in this life. On this he went to the side, and, hailing the men, ordered all but and, hailing the men, ordered all but and the proceeds equally dividence. and, hailing the men, ordered all but one to step aboard and drink to the health of the lonesome sailor they had come across. The word "drink" acted like a charm; they instantly hauled upon the painter and brought the boat to the chains and tumbled over the side, one of the negroes remained in her. They fell together in a body, and surveyed me and the ship with a hundred marks of astonishment.

"My lads," said I, "my rig is a strange one, but I'll explain all shortly. The clothes I was cast away in are

"There's a deal o' water 'tween this and the Thames. How do she sail?—no man knows."

"I want none but willing men," said I. "Americans make as good sailors as the English. What an English seaman can face any of you can. There is another negro in the boat. Will you let him step aboard captain? He may join."

Northern & Western they all followed, making the interior join.

they all followed, making the interior that had been so long silent ring with their heasy tread, whilst from time to time a gruff, hoarse whisper broke from one of them. But superstition lay strong upon their imagination, and they were awed and quiet. The daylight came down the hatch, but for all that the cabin was darksome.

I waited till the last man had entered, and then said, "Before we settled."
