FAN FAN.

New, between these two definitions there is a good deal of indifference—both in sind, body and estate. Of course, they both had bodies—else wherefore record them in these pages? But she had the mind and he had the estate, while as for those two attributes—well, to quote Miss May Keodal, 'what a world apart they are,

May Kendal, 'what a world apart they are, my dear!'
Having spent all she knew on her smartest dress to go to her best party in, the necessary shoes therefor nearly broke her, and her mamma absolutely retused to advance her any more on her next quarter's allowance. But her mind was quite at ease respecting gloves and sto kings, for the army had supplied her with one and the navy with the other—under cover of a little betting. Which was strictly proper, for are they not sister services?

But her fan was sadly broken. So this Bother fan was sadly broken. So this economical young woman spent the afternoon before this special party sitting with her back to the light to give her complexion every chance mending the improvident fan with a weak solution? Well, she knew what she was about—better than you would.

what she was about—better than you would.

Then she dressed, feeling the while that her brushes ought to be of gold and ivory instead of plain wood; that one silk petticoat is worth two cotton ones; in short, luxury seemed to her the sweet peach which surrounds the unattainable kernel of contentment. 'Who cares for the stone or its contents p' she thought, 'but, O, how luscious is the juicy fruit!'

Being a young woman of mind, you see she quite recognized that the more artificial metaphors are at present the clearest modes of speech, though she knew better than to talk like that to her partners. Rather!

So she went with her estimable means.

than to talk like that to her partners. Rather!
So she went with her estimable mamma, and she danced. As I binted before, she was personable—very; and she had a taking way with her—when she liked; and she had a cool head, which is better than rubies, and sometimes leads to them, and though she did not have to live by her wits, she frequently made them afford various little additions to her toilet, and that is no small matter to a smart young woman.

additions to her toilet, and that is no small matter to a smart young woman.

So she danced and was sought after. And presently, while she was sitting out, her partner took hold of that guileless fan. In an istant it was broken, and her little cry of distress quite went to his heart. . Being rather improunious himselt, Schilling knew how difficult it was to raise the coin at every moments notice.

ling knew how difficult it was to raise the coin at every moments notice.

Doesn't half match your dress,' he said, as she examined it carefully, saying she must try if it could be mended: 'don't you bother about it. I'll send you another.'

How awfully sweet! And it's just like you to think or matching my dress.' Her tone was charming.

Then presently she went in to supper with a man whom she had met two or three times and knew vaguely as one knows quadrates of cavual acquaintances. But it was only that evening she had heard him described as very rich, and it made her thoughtful. This was the young man with body and estate—he thought her uncommonly smart.

commonly smart.

'How slippery those silks are !' she said, as they finished supper—it was a sit-down one, and of remrkable virtue. Do you think you could pick up my fan for me—it has dropped down your side ?'

He pushed back his chair and stooped.

Of it's broken! she cried, bending too.
At that moment Mr. Gould litted his head—there was a slight collision—she blushed charmingly—he held the fan awkwardly in his hand—the sticks were smashed across.

Then that young man passed on the other side of the table; he took in the situation, and he smiled an evil smile. She blushed again, deeply. The man of opulence stuttered.

'Shall we go back into the dancing-room?' she said softly, but she did not put out her hand for her fan; so he carried it.

'I'm awfully sorry,' said Mr. Gould, for the second time when they were in the corridor.

'It was an old friend,' she rejorned plain-tively. 'Shall we turn into the library and cremate the relics?' I can't bear the idea or its being thrown on the dusheap.'

When they stood by the fire he offered it to her, but she shook her head, smiling this time. No, that is too cruel. You did it, and you must burn the poor thing.'

'I'm awfu'ly sorry,' he said, for the third time. May—er—may I not send you snother?

O, but this was of no value, really; I can get one myself.'

'No; do let me; it was all my clumsiness
Let me have your address and I'll send you one.'

She hesitated, paused reflectively, till.
litting hereyes to h.m., she murmured, 'Will lifting hereyes to him, she murmined, 'Will you bring it then?'

She went home that evening and dreamed of having silver brushes with the most elaborate monograms procurable. But the rich young man fatuously conversed with his old school-fellow, the poor young man, who threw himself in his way. So they became righteously indignant over the art fulness of the schemer.

'Let's send her one of those Japanese paper things, 'aid young Schilling, 'come round to my rooms; we'll find one there, and do it up; with our kind regards.'

'All right," said young Gould, yawning, fir he was half askeep and easily led.

So they made the parcol up together.

So they made the parcol up tegether.
But Schilling auther overdid his part, and Gould, at the last moment relenting, pulled his card out again. while the other had his back turned hunting the scaling-wax, and kept his own counsel. After all, he was a gentleman at heart, which the other never was nor could be.

was nor could be.

And the next day Gould sent hera lovely fau from tne Burlington Arcade, for he was ashamed of the way thay had talked about whom he saw in the club.

Then she wrote him such a charming little note. And then he met her unexpectedly at church parade on Sunday (it was all the church he did in those days). And three weeks later they were engaged to be married; and she had three sets of hair brushes given her right off, and did not like any of them.

Young Schilling thinks him an awful idiot to have been taken in by a girl like that. But she is very pleased; she did not want a clever man at all. She has wits enough for both any day.

She will make a very good wife for a rich man. But young Schilling and she would have swindled everybody and come to grief in the end.—Pick-Me-Up.

Kidney Trouble Cured.

WELL KNOWN HOTEL KEEPER RE-LATE₈ BIS EXPERIENCE.

He Suffered Greatly from Kidney Trouble and Indigestion—He Doctored for a Long Time Without Getting any Relief.

From the Standard, Cornwall.

The march of the world's progress is forced, protracted and continuous, the competition for supremacy is keen. The man of business must keep rank if he would secure any covetable measure of success. The watchfulness, vigilance and thought involved in modern superintendency produces a severe strain on the physical and mental powers of modern business men, and exposes them to the attacks of certain disease. Considering that much depends on health in this struggle, it behooves those who would be victorious to guard sgainst the first approach of disease. Neglect of early adjustment of digestive and kidney disorders is often traught with dire results, added to his is the unpardonable trifling with health by experimenting with all manner of worthless decoctions. It is simply invaluable to make the acquaintance of a safe and effective remedy auch as Dr. William' Pink Pills. James MacPherson, hotel keeper in the village of Lancaster, Glengarry county, has done business for a number of years in Lancaster, and having successfully catered for the patronage of the travelling public therefore is avorably known not only at home but also abroad. In conversation with a mewpaper reporter he enumerated some of his ailments and how he was cured. About two years ago he said, "my whole digestive apparatus seemed to become disordered. Some days I could move around, then again I would be obliged to go to bed. I tried several things but with indifferent success. Occasionally I felt relieved, but in a day or two the old symptoms would return with a more depressing effect. This kind of thing went on until I became troubled with my kidneys which was a very annoying addition to my sufferings. I was restless, with a sensation of sickness at the stomach, with intermittent pain in the small of the back. I was miserable enough when I consulted the doctor, who, probab, ydid me some good because I telt relieved. The doctor's medicine was taken and his directions obeyed, but I did not improve. I had heard of the fame of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

office in a Maine town, and asked the operator if his line made connection with Boston. So says the Lewiston Journal which proceeds to tell the story thus:

On being answered in the affirmitive, the woman opened her reticule, took out a bunch of samples, and went to writing. After some difficulty she squeezed her thoughts into ten words, and approached the sending table. She laid down the written blank, two samples, one marked "A," the other "B," and a quarter.
