This is peculiarly interesting at the present time when one is too apt to suppose that the existing political situation absorbs the attention of all Frenchmen. We hope to hear from Mr. Bayard again before his studies in Paris are finished.

Anriversary exercises like those just closed at Mount Allison, must be productive of a great amount of good to the institutions directly interested. The advertising done for the Mount Allison College and Academies this week, without cost to the institutions and at considerable expense to the newspapers, could not have been purchased for less than two or three hundred dollars. On Monday the Academy examinations were conducted to a really beautiful conclusion, the hearty co-operation of the pupils with those in authority in their endeavors to render the exercises a success being especially noticeable. The classes have done well this year, and quite a number of those attending deserve particular mention for their evidently energetic efforts to master the branches of education to which they have directed their attention.
