

EXPLANATORY.

The Railway Act, 1903, Chapter 58, contains 311 sections, besides schedules of forms to be used by railway companies in making the various returns required by the Act. These sections are divided into sub-sections, rendering it necessary to make a great many references to fully cover the scope of the Act, the actual number being 1,600.

The compiler has endeavoured to make each reference as clear as possible, in order that any section or subject may be identified before referring to the Act itself, and has also thought it wise to dispense with abbreviations.
