QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. Miscellaneous.

NAILS FOR SHINGLING.

About nine years ago we built a barn, and used wire shingle nails in shingling. The nails have nearly all rusted off, and the shingles are coming loose. What would you advise me to do? Would it be wise to re-nail it with cut nails?

M. A. C.

Ans.—Renail with steel cut nails is the advice given by an experienced hardware man, who quotes the testimony of many builders.

WATER-TIGHT CELLAR WALLS AND FLOORS—VARIETY OF TURNIPS FOR SHIPPING.

Will a cement floor keep water out of cellar? This spring I had eighteen inches of water. Cellar is four feet below surface of ground. What thickness would you make floor? Any information in regard to keeping water out will be gladly received.

2. Have a piece of ground, been in meadow for years, being low ground. On the one side there is a high knoll. Would turnips grow on low side, and potatoes on the knoll? What kinds would do best? Turnips are for shipping.

NEW SUBSCRIBER.

Ans.—To insure a really dry cellar, drainage should be provided to carry water away from the foundation; but a good cement wall, made with a pretty rich mortar, say, one part Portland cement to five or six of clean gravel, and well rammed, will prevent anything more than a certain amount of dampness from seeping through. The floor should be laid on a grouting of one part cement to ten of gravel, and finished with a two-inch coat, mixed one of cement to three of gravel or coarse sand. In building a wall in a place where trouble from moisture is anticipated, see that the outside face is smooth and hard-finished, else water settling into the wall is much more liable to percolate through it. Plastering the inside of a leaky wall helps, but does not always overcome the trouble.

2. The plan proposed should answer well. Rennie's Queen is a variety of turnip which has given excellent yields in the Experimental Department at Guelph, and which Prof. Zavitz describes as "a very nice, smooth turnip, well suited for the shipping trade."

GARGET IN EWE—LAMENESS IN SOW.

1. Ewe with twin lambs lost one before going out to grass. After a while she got lame, and could hardly get up. Her udder being very hard, we put crude oil on to take the caking out, but she would not eat, and died in a few days. What is the cause, and what the treatment of this ailment?

2. We have two Tamworth sows running in the yard, with a shelter to go into, being fed on corn, peas and oats. One of them got very lame in one hind leg, so lame that she does not step on it. When standing, this leg quivers. She is falling away in flesh, and seems a little lame in one fore leg now. What is wrong with her; cause; treatment?

W. J. H.

Ans.—1. This is garget, which generally attacks ewes that are heavy milkers, and is brought on by colds or chills, due to the ewes being compelled to lie on the cold, wet ground. In this case, the loss of one lamb left more milk than the other could take, which would tend to cause the trouble. The treatment should be promptly attended to on the first appearance of illness. A quarter of a pound of Epsom salts should be given, and the udder bathed for half an hour, and the udder three times a day, with hot water. After rubbing dry, rub well with a mixture of lard and spirits turpentine. Should an abscess form, it should be carefully cut open and well washed out with a weak solution of carbolic acid.

2. This lameness is due to too liberal feeding with grain and want of exercise. Feed lightly, and give a dose of salts and a dessertspoonful of sulphur in food twice a day to relax the bowels and purify the blood. Get her out on the ground for an hour or two on warm days in a sheltered, sunny place.
