

Cheaper Motive Power for the Farm

On almost every farm horses furnish the motive power that operates farm implements and machinery. Power outfits, while effective under certain conditions, are not likely to supplant the horse for general farm work, and good horses can always be expected to have a high value in Western Canada. The farmer's investment in horse motive power can be greatly reduced if he will

Raise Horses on the Farm

If mares are used instead of geldings for farm work, and provision made for the care of colts, every farmer can effect a great saving in the cost of his horses and also increase the revenue from the farm by selling surplus stock. The experience of horse breeders has shown that horses do better if given shelter at nights in winter. The barn in which horses are kept need not be especially warm. A building that is free from drafts and affords protection from storms is sufficient. But it MUST BE DRY.
