A MODERN DEBORAH.

At the eastern extremity of, the long, straggling street of Nagy-Nemethy are the crumbling ruins of a deserted house. More than 40 years ago, when the Hun-garian people awoke and began to rattle their chains, there lived in this house a young Jewish couple, Adolf Sonnenfeld and his wife Eglantine. Although scarce-ly 15 years of age when her husbant first took her from her parents' watchful care, she was no half opened bud, but a glorious woman, a blooming rose of Sharon. Son penfeld, like many a young German towns man, was a slender, fair haired young fel-low. His wife Egla was a lovely Jewess of the purest type. Suppressed fervor lurked behind the cold gaze of her dark, scornful eyes, and the mobile mouth could soften sweetly to the warming kiss or hardhusband was merely a practical man of business, of a sly and cunning disposition, called good humored by his friends because he was too cautious to risk doing an in-

In spite of the differences in their characters Egla seemed to love her husband even more than her fatherland, and that speaks volumes, for she was an ardent Hungarian. She had borne her husband two children and through her teaching they were growing up with a fervent love of home and fatherland.

The storms of February swept over Paris and the feverish March days in Vienna were followed by the Hungarian rising, while her character was developing from day to day in strength and energy. But when in October the revolution brought the Hungarian army before Vienna, her zeal for the national cause at length took a tangible form. One morning at breakfast, having scanned the newspaper, she commenced: "Adolf, every one is taking up arms for the fatherland—old men, boys, and even women. Why do you hold back?"

women. Why do you hold back?"

"Are you mad?" cried Sonnenfeld, he'f irritated, half frightened. "What is Hungarian liberty to me? I am a Jew. Even if I wanted to go to the war they would only laugh at me. I don't know how to hold a gun."

"You can learn". 'You can learn'

"I shan't think of it!" cried Sonnen-feld, cutting her short. "We have soldiers nough. I am no hero!"

The truth came home to Egla that her husband was no hero very shortly. Hus-sars came into the village, and then all who had hitherto held back came forward and joined the colors. Sonnenfeld alone was not to be seen. He seemed to have appeared, and only came in sight again after the last horseman had quitted Nagy-Nemethy. Egla found out afterward that he had been hidden in the cellar and supplied with food and drink by the cook. Her first impulse was to take away her children and leave the husband whom she despised for his cowardice. Sonnenfeld fell on his knees and begged her to He raised his hands to heaven and implored her with tears in his eyes not to leave him, and when at last the children interceded she remained. From that day she treated him with st lent disdain. That proved more galling than open hostility or reproaches. Hitherto he had taken no interest whatever in the struggles of the fatherland, but now he began to interest himself more and more. But his sympathies were all with the anti-Magyar party. He hated the agi-tators who had robbed him of his wife's love and the patriots whose heroic courage love and the patriots whose heroic courage branded him as a coward. He could bare-ly hide his joy when Windischgratz, with the imperial troops, crossed the frontier and pushed on to Budapest, but Egla grew ever paler, ever quieter. When the Hungarian capital fell and the national troops fell back on Debriezin, Sonnenfeld felt sure that all was over. He went about radiant and joyful, as if he had won the victory or inherited a million.

It was not long before the First Imper-ialist light cavalry showed themselves in Nagy-Nemethy. A whole brigade followed and pitched camp in the neighborhood. Some of the soldiers were billeted in the village, and the general himself took up his quarters in Sonnenfeld's house The husband surpassed himself in hospitality, loyalty and attention to the wants of his guest. Egla, who held herself aloof, timid but inimical, one day saw the general kick her husband out of the door. She felt as if her heart were crushed; then the blood shed to her face, but she endured in

A few days later hussars appeared in the neghborhood, and the imperialist outposts exchanged shots with them. During the night the brigade became alarmed, for the lungarians approached on all sides and hreatened to overwhelm them. Every one was afoot, the inhabitants stood in the treet doors whispering, while cannon and eavily armed cavalry rattled by. who had dressed herself rapidly, found hat her husband had left the house. glided out after him, only to find him by the garden bedge deep in conversation with the general Sonnenfeld bowed obsequiously as he spoke, and the general laughed amiably. That laugh seemed to Egla even more insulting than the kick he had given her husband a few days back. She only caught detached words and isolated phrases of the conversation. But she gathered that while her husband was assuring him of his devotion the general was complaining that he could gain no information, even from the poorest persant. At sunrise an adjutant arrived bearing a scaled letter for the general, on reading which he gave the order for the imperialist troops to with draw to the south.

The changeful scenes of the Hungarian winter campaign followed in quick rotation, each day bringing contradictory reports. Egla was consumed with anxiety and excitement, and she passed sleepless nights of watching, only to sink, wearied and exhausted, on her couch as daylight approached, and when the bright sunlight streamed in upon her she would awake with a start as if aroused by some horrid wisits from suspicious looking characters would absent himself from home for days together. Egla watched him with anxious heart and increasing uneasiness.

One beautiful, surishiny winter's day hussars with loaded carbines rode into the village. The villagers received them with loud hurrabs and cries of welcome, and loud hurrahs and cries of welcome, and the joy was increased when a Honvad battalion followed them on foot. The Hungarians halted, picketed their outposts, sent out patrols to all points of the compass, and, their duty over, began to think of the commissariat. The inhabitants of Nagy-Nemethy brought out the best they had to compensate the brave fellows, if ever so little, fon the hardships of their campaign. Egla did not like to follow the example of the others without first obtainexample of the others without first obtaining her husband's consent. She went in search of him, but was unable to find him either at home or anywhere in the village. Evil forebodings took possession of Night closed in. Every one slept in Nagy-Nemethy—every one but Egla. She sat on her bed waiting and listening. She felt that she must listen and wait for—something; something so terrible it hardly took form in her mind, yet it was some thing that had been hanging over her for a long time. She sat and waited—one hour—two hours—till she grew drowsy from sheer exhaustion. Suddenly she was startled. Was it the sound of shots? What was that confused noise? The trumpets brayed, words of command were heard, and the firing increased. She ran to the window, and as she threw it open a bullet whistled past and impinged upon the wall behind her. She drew back quickly and extinguished the light. There was fight-ing in the streets of Nagy-Nemethy. The imperialists had advanced upon the lonved battalion under cover of the night, and the Hungarians had been overpow-ered. A few of them managed to escape with the colors, but the rest were taken prisoners or died the patriot's death.

Egla sat in her room like one in a trance Her thoughts stood still. The time passed away, but she was heedless of it till suddenly she started at the sound of voices in the next room. Her husband had re-turned, and with him— How well she knew those clear, commanding tones as she listened to the words of praise and the romise of a great reward-to her husband.

The imperialists did not remain long, and her husband went away in their train. Egla obtained a conveyance, and, wrap-ping her children up warmly, drove away with them to her father's house. Having placed them in safety, she returned home on the third day and awaited her hus band's return.

On the fourth evening after her return she heard her husband enter the house softly, like a thief, and like a thief he started when his wife, candle in hand, stepped out of her room before him. Plac the light upon the table she seated herself, and coldly and sternly, like a judge, she commenced her examination.
"Where were you?"

"I have done a good bit of business.
"I know it." "I have delivered a contract for bread

"You have delivered up your brethren? You spy!" shricked the Jewess, flaming and bacon to with indignation. "What do you mean?" Sonnenfeld was

"I overheard your conversation with the "Anything further?" And the husband tried to laugh.

The beautiful Jewess stood up and gazed steadily into his face. "This further—you are a traitor and deserve to die, but I have loved you and would not have the name that I have borne and the name of my children dishonored before the world. You shall not therefore swing from the gallows, as you deserve, for I will let you kill yourself here upon the

"I believe you have lost your reason, cried her busband. For answer she glided quietly into her room and fetched a loaded pistol. "You room and fetched a loaded pistol. "You must die," cried Egla, "and if you have sun so low that you do not understand utterable contempt and then uncocked the "No, truly, you are not worth powder and shot." She turned from him and went into her own room, when he feverishly sprang to the door and fastened it behind her

Egla listened, and when she felt certain her husband had gone to bed she wrapped perself in a fur clock and stepped jout through the long window into the night. As day broke the tread of horses sound ed in front of Sonnenfeld's house, and a few blows from the butt end of a musket soon broke open the door. Hussars, with his wife at their head, burst into the room where he was sleeping.

"There is the spy," cried she coldly.
"He is my husband, but I would see him hanged. Sonnenfeld, whining vainly, pleaded for pardon as the hussars bound his hands be hind him and dragged him forth. His wife looked on in silence. When the rope was placed round his neck and the end slung over the lime tree, she swung herself into the saddle of a horse that the hussars had prepared for her and galloped away, followed in a few minutes by the soldiers At the taking of Waitzen a beautiful woman rode in front of the Honved bat talion. It was the Jowess of Nagy-Ne methy. Once again was she seen in the prefront of the fight when the Poles of Mazuchelli's regiment stormed the greet bill of Komorn at the point of the bayonet, and there she fell riddled with bullets, but wrapped in the standard of her country and staining its colors with her blood.— Translated From the German For San

One on Eishop Potter. Bishop Potter said at a press banquet given in New York: "One day I was eat-ing my dinner when the servant entered the room and informed me that a young man from a local newspaper had called to see me. She said she had informed him that I could not see him, as I was at din-ner, but he had pushed her aside with the remark that he would wait inside.

Thereupon I arose and went out into he hall with my napkin in my hand. I walked past the young man to the door, opened it and with a wave of my hand signified that he might retire. The next day the young man published a highly col-ored report in his paper, in which he stated that it was possible that Bishop Potter might be a Christian, but he certainly was not a gentleman.

which are absolutely necessary to happy wifehood and motherhood.

Any weakness or disease of the delicate special organs of her sex totally unfits a woman to be a wife or mother. It is a woman's primary duty to be strong and healthy in a womanly way. Careful living and judicious treatment will certainly and completely eradicate these delicate complaints.

A complete and practical treatise on this subject with careful professional advice and suggestions for self-treatment are contained in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by R. V. Pierce, M. D., chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. This 1000 page illustrated book will be sent paper-bound absolutely free for cost of mailing and customs only: 31 one-cent stamps, or cloth-bound for 50 stamps. Address Dr. Pierce, as above.

Dr. Pierce has given a life-time to the study of women's diseases, and has had as wide a practical experience in this particular field as any living physician. His "Pavorite Prescription" is a perfect and scientific remedy for diseases of the feminine organs. It is the only medicine devised for this particular purpose by an educated and skilled physician. It is a positive and permanent cure as attested by more than ninety thousand grateful women.
