Pigeons as Life-savers.

British soldiers and sailors are making frequent use of carrier pigeons far out at sea. Many a man, says Current History, has been saved from death by the speed of the homing pigeon.

Capt. Thomas Crisp, who had won the Victoria Cross and who died at the wheel under fire from a German submarine, lived long enough to despatch a message by pigeon. The bird sped away with his last request for help for his son and crew, and they were saved—but only through the timely arrival of their pigeon measunger.

conser,

On another occasion a flying boat (a boat with airplane wings) and a hydro-airplane (an airplane with floats in place of landing wheels) both got into difficulties in stormy weather, and it seemed that all lives must be lost. A message for help was sent out by pigeon. In the teeth of a flerce wind the gallant bird fought it way home, only to die from exhaustion on arrival. But its message had been delivered, assistance was sent with all speed, and the lives of both crews were saved.

Aesthetics and Health.

"The connection between individual health and beauty, though seldom recognized in theory, is intimate in practice," says the New York Medical Journal. True, extravagant ideas of what is beautiful have caused much nuisance and harm in the absurd and unhealthy fashions ess, but it is to the aesthetic nct of people that we owe most sanitary improvement. The removal of filth, so important to public health, and cleanliness in general, are due in a large part to a dislike for uglimess.

Medical science is coming more and more to the idea of enforcing sanitary measures by fostering a public sense of aesthetics. The Journal concludes with rare sense: "One of the chief means for the furthering of public health consists not so much in preaching the need of sanitary conditions as in awakening the sense of heauty."
