

ONE HUNDRED YEARS FROM NOW.

Why prize so much this world's end? Why trouble at her end? Why weep to view the dawn, or choose Ambition for your God? Ah! why so low, from day to day. To earthly treasures bow, since they no more to us are dear. One hundred years from now.

ONLY AN IRISH BOY.

THE FORTUNES OF ANDY BURKE.

CHAPTER XXIV.—(CONTINUED) 'Are you going to Boston?' asked Godfrey.

'Yes,' said Andy. 'What are you going for?' 'Important business.' 'Has Miss Grant turned you off?' 'She didn't say anything about it this morning, do you want to take my place?' 'Do you think I'd stoop to be a hired boy?' said Godfrey, haughtily.

'You wouldn't need to stoop,' said Andy; 'you ain't any too tall.' Godfrey winced at this. He was not tall of his age, and he wanted to be. Andy had been growing faster than he, and was now, though scarcely an old, two inches taller.

'It makes no difference about being tall. I am a gentleman, and don't have to work for a living like you do.' 'What are you going to be when you grow up?' 'A lawyer.' 'Then, won't you work for money?' 'Of course.'

'Then you'll be a hired man and work for a living.' 'That's very different. When are you coming back?' 'When I've finished my business.' 'How soon will that be?' 'I can't tell yet.'

'Humph! I shouldn't wonder if you were running away.' 'Don't you tell anybody,' said Andy, in a bantering tone. 'Where did you get the money to pay for your ticket?' 'What would you give to know?' 'You are impudent,' said Godfrey, his cheek flushing.

'So are your questions,' said Andy. 'I dare say you stole it.' 'Look here, Godfrey Preston,' said Andy, roused to indignation by this insinuation. 'You'd better not say that again if you know what's best for yourself.'

THE MERCHANT FROM PORTLAND.

'Look here, young chap,' said Andy, 'what made you tell me that was the Merchant's Bank?' 'Isn't it?' asked the bootblack, with a grin.

'It's the bank where you'll be wanted some time. Shouldn't wonder if they made a mistake and took you up instead of your money.' 'Have you got any money in the Merchant's Bank?' asked the other.

'I'm going to see if they won't give me some. If you hadn't cheated me, maybe I'd have invited you to dine with me at my hotel.' 'Where are you stopping?' asked the street-boy, not quite knowing how much of Andy's story to believe.

'At the most fashionable hotel.' 'Parker's?' 'You're good at guessing. Perhaps you'd like to dine there?' 'I don't know as they'd let me in,' said the boy, doubtfully; 'but I'll show you where there's a nice eatin' house, where they don't charge half so much.'

'Wouldn't be fashionable enough for me. I shall have to dine alone. See what comes of tryin' to fool your grandfater.' Andy went on, leaving the boy in doubt whether his just had really lost him a dinner.

Andy didn't go to the Parker House, however. His expenses were to be paid by the Misses Grant, and he felt that it wouldn't be right to be extravagant at their expense. 'I shall come across an eatin' house presently,' he said to himself.

Not far off he found one with the bill of fare exposed outside, with the prices. Andy examined it, and found that was not an expensive place. He really felt hungry after his morning's ride, and determined, before he attended to his business to get dinner. He accordingly entered, and seated himself at one of the tables. A waiter came up and awaited his commands.

'What'll you have?' he asked. 'Bring me a plate of roast beef, and a cup of coffee,' said Andy, 'and be quick about it, for I haven't eaten anything for three weeks.'

'Then I don't think one plate will be enough for you,' said the waiter, laughing. 'I'll do to begin on,' said Andy.

CHAPTER XXV.

Andy was careful, however. He put the money into a pocket-book, or rather wallet, with which he had been supplied by the Misses Grant, put it in his inside pocket, and then buttoned his coat up tight. He didn't mind how suspiciously he was looked at.

But this was not his last business visit. There was another bank in the same street where it was necessary for him to call and receive dividends. Again Fairfax followed him, and again he saw Andy receive a considerable sum of money.

'There's fast picking here,' thought Fairfax. 'Now I must manage in some way to relieve him of that money. There's altogether too much for a youngster like him. Shouldn't wonder if the money belonged to that man I tried to rob. If so, all the better.'

In this conjecture, as we know, Fairfax was mistaken. However, it made comparatively little difference to him whose money it was, as long as there was a chance of his getting it into his possession. The fact was, that his finances were not in a very flourishing condition just at present. He could have done better to follow some honest and respectable business, and avoided all the dishonest shifts and intricate laws to which he was compelled to resort, but he had started wrong and it was difficult to persuade him that even now it would have been much better for him to amend his life and his ways.

In this state of affairs he thought it a great piece of good luck that he should have fallen in with a boy in charge of a large sum of money, whom, from his youth and inexperience, he would have less trouble in robbing than an older person.

Andy had already decided how he would spend the afternoon. He had heard a good deal about the Boston Museum, its large collection of curiosities, and the plays that were performed there. One of the pleasantest amusements he had was of a visit to this place, the Paradise of country people. Now that his business was concluded, he determined to go there at once. But first he must inquire the way.

Turning round, he saw Fairfax without recognizing him. 'Can you direct me to the Boston Museum?' he asked. 'Certainly, with pleasure,' said Fairfax, with alacrity.

'In fact, I am going there myself. I suppose you are going to the afternoon performance?' 'Yes, sir.' 'Have you ever been there?' 'No, but I have heard a good deal about it. I don't live in the city.'

'Nor do I,' said Fairfax. 'I am a merchant of Portland, Maine. I have come to the city to buy my winter stock of goods. As I only come twice a year I generally try to enjoy myself a little while I am here. Do you stay in the city over night?' 'Yes, said Andy.

BRANTFORD

MOWERS, REAPERS & BINDERS. THE undersigned is now prepared to supply Farmers with any of the above mentioned Machines. After 13 years experience in the machine business he is convinced that the Brantford Machines are the most perfect ever offered to the Farmers of this Island. Every Farmer in want of a Machine should call and examine them before purchasing. Thousands of testimonials from Farmers who have used the Brantford Machines could be given, but the following from the highest authority in the Dominion will be sufficient to convince the intelligent Farmers that they must be good.

ONTARIO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, GUELPH, 28th January, 1883. Messrs. A. Harris, Son & Co. (Limited), Brantford, Ontario. GENTLEMEN.—It affords me particular pleasure to testify regarding your BRANTFORD REAPER, which we have had in use for two years. During the last eight years we have had some ten other reapers on trial, and in our experience, after a thorough handling, that none of them equals the Brantford in ease of management, quality of work, strength, and particularly in taking up 1 1/2 lbs grain and keeping in repair. This testimony is given unhesitatingly by me. (Signed) F. J. WOOD, Farm Superintendent.
