Furniture of Quality

We Keep Pounding Away on Quality.

We don't want you to forget it. It is more important than price in the Furniture business. The long-wearing qualities of Newson's Furniture are known all over P. E. Island. Added to this important quality is the extreme lowness of price which prevails at this store. This combination of high quality and low price is what has made this store what it is—the place where people of means are sure of GOOD things—where those of slender purse are sure of full value for their money. Come here for your next furniture purchase.

Roman Notes.

"Vox Urbis," Roman correspondent of the N. Y. Freeman's Journal, has this to say, among other things, in a recent communication:

When Pius X., published his "Juridical Code of Canon Law," the report went round that he was preparing also a document dealing with religious art. That was not true, though it is quite certain that the Holy Father has a very keen sense of what is fitting and unfitting in the house of God. Ten years ago, at S. Mark's, Venice, it was calculated to give anybody that sense. But any local or no local, the Holy Father is very anxious about the beauty of God's house. A vast number of ugly and unsuitable churches have been erected during the last half century throughout America, England, Ireland and Australia. It is a pity that so much hard-earned money (hard-earned, indeed, for the most of it has come from hard-workers), should have been so badly spent. Nor does the evil end here, for a great many really beautiful churches have been and are being rendered hideous by the unsightly decorations, the gaudy statues, the ginger-bread candlesticks that are employed to adorn them. Pius X., feels this very much and would like to put a stop to it; Italy is worse than most countries in this respect. It is no uncommon thing here to find beautiful columns of marble covered over with tawdry hangings, to see exquisitely carved altars decorated with glaring bouquets of artificial flowers, to find masterpieces of Christian painting half hidden behind some modern dabs in hideous frames. What the Holy Father will do to put an end to this kind of thing only he himself knows. But in the meantime there should be some discreet authority to keep a vigilant watch over such abuses and to exclude those that may have already crept in.

Pius X., in instituting the visitation of the churches and religious houses of Rome (there are over seven hundred of them altogether, and the visitation will take at least three years to accomplish), asked the visitors to pay special attention to the devotions in vogue. It sometimes happens that devotions almostavoring of irreverent persons, and spread from one diocese to another to the great harm of souls; certain prayers are printed and circulated without authority; certain blessings, temporal or spiritual, are promised as the inevitable result of devout practices. The Holy Father is anxious that the bishops keep a vigilant eye on all unauthorized devotions, and root out all of them that are objectionable. A great deal more might be said on this head, but the subject is too delicate for general discussion.

We know what Pius X., thinks about the training of priests, and the kind of priests for whom he has a special predilection. But it is hardly too much to say that his interest in the selection of the members of the hierarchy is equally deep. He has already done some remarkable things with regard to the creation of bishops. Leo XIII., felt constrained to tolerate for several years two French bishops who were anything but satisfactory, and nobody can wonder at this toleration, for the removal of the prelates in defiance of the French government was admirably calculated to hasten the anti-religious crusade which is now sweeping all over France. But Pius X., saw that the time had come for removing those two bishops and facing the consequences, no matter how serious they might be. We all know the sequel. The people of Lucca and of Palermo were particularly desirous of having bishops for their vacant sees chosen from the ranks of the aristocracy. The Pope sent them instead two children of the people, such as he is himself. There was another very distinguished prelate in Rome whom everybody picked out to be a cardinal of the Curia at no distant date. Instead, Pius X., made him a bishop away in the north of Italy where his zeal and talents will find greater scope. But more important still than isolated instances like these was the step taken by Pius X., for the general appointment of Italian Bishops. Henceforth the obolus of them is left in the first instance with the Supreme Congregation of the Holy Office, which is the most rigorous tribunal in the world to-day; and no bishop is appointed in Italy until the Holy Father himself is fully persuaded of his fitness. I may be that in the future his Holiness will entrust the appointment of bishops in other countries to the Holy Office; meanwhile, he himself exercises a rigorous surveillance on the selections of Propaganda.

For Business Women

IT IS THE CORRECT THING

To remember that work is not degradation. That idleness under certain circumstances may be. That the Blessed Virgin, the descendant of kings, the Mother of the King of kings, did not disdain either poverty or work. That the world respects a woman who respects herself. To be strictly on time in the schoolroom, office, or wherever one's duties call. For a working woman to remember that the time for which she is paid belongs to her employer. To claim no indulgence on the score of sex. To accept it gratefully if it is given. To remember that employers as a rule prefer to discharge a woman rather than find fault with her. To remember that prudence, patience, and perseverance, are virtues particularly desirable in a business woman. To work only under reputable and honorable employers. To insist at all times upon the respect due a woman. To let one's conduct deserve it. To be courteous and considerate of one's co-laborers. To remember that courtesy to business associates does not imply a necessity of receiving them as friends if they are uncoöperative. To be scrupulously neat and severely plain in attire. To avoid jewelry, striking colors, pronounced styles, on the score of good taste as well as prudence. To take proper care of one's physical health so as to avoid the "breakdown" which unfortunately usually overtakes the woman who is steadily employed. To remember that one can not work and be "in society" at the same time. To find temporal happiness in home and friends and the pleasure which may be enjoyed in obscurity, and not sigh for social amusements beyond one's reach.

The Correct Thing for Catholics.

Items of Interest.

Rcv. Father Martin O'Grady, who left Mill Hill College, London, in January last, to establish the English mission in the Congo, is dead of fever.

Canon O'Hanlon, P. P., Sandy Mount, County Dublin, author of "The Lives of the Irish Saints," is reported to be dangerously ill. He is 84 years of age.

The old Papal city of Bologna has just been the scene of a remarkable municipal election. A union of Catholics and Monarchists has wrested the municipal government from the Socialists, who were defeated by a majority of 5,000 on a total poll of less than 10,000.

The "Osservatore Romano" denies the report published in Paris that negotiations are on foot for a visit of the Emperor Francis Joseph to Rome. The journal recalls the events which followed the visits of President Loubet to Rome, and adds that the Holy See will maintain the same attitude in future as it has done in past.

The annual festival in honor of Joan of Arc was celebrated the other afternoon at Notre Dame, Cardinal Richard, Archbishop of Paris, being present at the ceremony. The panegyric of the national heroine was delivered by the Abbe Richard, cure of Saint Pierre de Gros Caillon. At the same time a statue of Joan of Arc was unveiled in the square in the avenue de Boule at Neuilly.

Just so sure as parents make the rod the judge of every little action of the child deemed wrongful, just so long will those children grow to be men and women, who, in their turn, will use rough physical force on anyone weaker than themselves," says the Pittsburgh Catholic. "And harsh as is the frequent rod, harsh, too, is the rough language, the abusive words, the constant nagging, harmful and degrading to the child, and more so to the injudicious, hot-headed parents. It hurts them as much as it does their victims."

On May 8 appeared a work of Mgr. Patrizi ("La dotazione imperprescrittibile e la legge delle garantigie"; Tipografia Tata Goranri, Roma), arguing that the indempnity assigned to the Holy See by the law of guarantees is imprescriptible, and it could be claimed by the Roman Pontiff "without his act being described as a recognition of the existing state of things, without any idea being involved of an abdication of the inalienable ('impreoscindibili') rights of the Holy See." The arrears now amount to $115,875,000 Italian lire.

The "Osservatore Romano" has the following notice with regard to a recent publication which has attracted a great amount of notice and discussion: "In order to prevent the public from attributing an undue importance to a tract recently published referring to the acts of the Holy Father and to the intention of his Holiness, we are authorized to state explicitly that the Holy See has had no part whatever in the said publication, and that the Holy Father has neither inspired nor approved the tract."

The Protestant "Journal," of Geneva, announces in a recent issue a renaissance among the French Catholics. "M. Combes," it says, "has just published in a Vienna newspaper an article which contains his own apology, and at the same time a cry of alarm. His policy has given to Catholicism a force hitherto unknown. The Catholics have been in a state of lethargy, but they are now throwing it off. By tracts, newspapers, conferences, etc., they are stirring all classes of society.  The Catholics have passed to the offensive from the passive resistance policy."

"Men are but boys of a larger growth," says the New Century, "and many of the affairs of life are like the jostle on the playground of the school. The boys who play do not mind a fall or a bump or the loss of a advantage point; they keep at it till the end of the game; and often the boy who has fallen, or slipped his hold, recovers and wins out. He has not sulked, nor repined, nor growled at the umpire, nor sought to foul. But, whether he wins or loses, he is good tempered when the bell rings. He has had his play. Now that is the plank of life. The lesson of it should go with us in the after affairs of business and politics and society. Let there be pluck to rise when we fall, and use to the best advantage the time left. And don't mind the bruises."

The following extract from an editorial in the Australian reads as if it might have been written of conditions in the United States. "To many, home is simply a boarding house, and they give to their parents just as much of their wages as they would to any landlady. Such a system must inevitably be pernicious and demoralizing in its effects. This, indeed, is not the rule, but it is by no means rare. Our precocious youngsters early realize the fact that independence and liberty are the inalienable right of every free-born Australian. Reverence, even towards their parents, is too often considered unbecoming, degrading, and unworthy of a free people. Independence and liberty, excellent though they are, can be carried to excess, and are never in greater danger than when the one degenerates into impudence and the other into license."

Here are some of the provisions of the edict of the Czar granting liberty of worship to the Russian people: Secession from the Orthodox Church will not involve any proscription or any deprivation or curtailment of personal or civil rights, and Dissenters who are of age will be recognized as belonging to their new denomination. On the conversion of one member of a married couple to another persuasion, the children of the marriage who are minors will remain in the religion of their unconverted parent; but on the conversion of a married couple the children under 14 years of age shall adopt the religion of the parents, the older children remaining in their former faith. The administrator of the Ministry of Justice is directed in due time to take measures for ameliorating the lot of persons condemned for religious offences, whose punishments may be lightened or altogether remitted. With reference to the creeds professed by Dissenters, the committee of ministers has decided to remove the existing restrictions not only in the case of Orthodox Dissenters, but also in the case of Roman Catholics, Myhamedans and Buddhists. For the opening of houses of prayer only the sanction of the ecclesiastical authorities concerned is requisite. The compulsory closing of Roman Catholic monasteries and convents in the Kingdom of Poland ceases so soon as the new decrees come into force. Religious instruction in the case of Dissenters is to be imparted in the mother tongue in educational establishments.
