Songs that have Moved Nations.

Who Wrote Them and What Inspired Them.

The greatest poem of the war was writ-John Brown,' and commences 'Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming Lord.' Mrs. Howe wrote it early one morning and, it is said, she penned the lines with her eyes shut. The night before she had been out riding in the country near Washington, and her party had narrowly escaped being captured by a troop of Confederates. As they came into Washington they sang 'John Brown's Body,' and the tune kept ring-ing in Mrs. Howe's head all night. When she awoke before daylight she began to make verses to it, and in the fear that she would forget them she wrote them off, according to a habit she had formed to save her eyes, without looking at the paper. Mrs. Howe is still living and she ranks among the leaders of the
